EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined products of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

VII. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY

H. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

1. IN GENERAL

§ 427. Rules of Construction in General

In construing the language of an instruction, the court is bound to ascertain its meaning; and the instructions must be construed naturally and reasonably in the light of the language used and in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case in which they were given, so as to support the judgment if it is reasonably possible to do so.

In construing the language of an instruction, the court is bound to ascertain its meaning.¹ The instructions must be construed in the light of the language used,² not leaving out any words used therein or adding any words thereto,³ and must be given a natural and reasonable construction⁴ and the plain common-sense meaning the language was evidently intended to convey,⁵ when the words used are taken in their ordinary and popular acceptance,⁶ and should be construed so as to support the judgment if it is reasonably possible to do so.⁷

Instructions must be measured by the facts and circumstances of the case in which they were given,⁸ and, accordingly, if, when the language used is considered with respect to the theory on which the case was tried,⁹ and in view of pleadings and the evidence,¹⁰ the charge is free from error, it will not be ground for reversal, although wrong as an abstract proposition.¹¹ The general effect of the charge, rather than a casual expression in it, must govern the interpretation or construction of it.¹² Since the instructions must not be subjected to analytical criticism,¹³ a hypercritical¹⁴ or artificial¹⁵ construction should be avoided. They will be construed according to their essential meaning,¹⁶ and refined distinctions will not be indulged in.¹⁷ The literalities of language may be disregarded;¹⁸ the meaning of an instruction, and not the phraseology, is the important consideration.¹⁹ Where a charge is susceptible of more than one construction or meaning, it should be construed as a person of ordinary intelligence would understand it,²⁰ or as practical experience teaches that a jury, untrained in the law, would view it,²¹ or, as the court and jury, in the exercise of ordinary common sense, evidently understood it,²² and the jury will be deemed to have interpreted the instruction in the light of common experience.²³ Where, however, an instruction is such that it might convey to the mind of any man of ordinary capacity an incorrect view of the law applicable to the cause, it will be erroneous.²⁴

§ 428. Inadvertent Errors and Omissions

An instruction which states the law with substantial accuracy will not be regarded as erroneous merely because of verbal omissions which can be supplied from the context or because of slight verbal or clerical inaccuracies which are not prejudicial.

Where an instruction states the law with substantial accuracy, and is otherwise unobjectionable, it will not be regarded as erroneous merely because of verbal omissions which can be supplied from the context,²⁵ or because of slight verbal or clerical inaccuracies which are not prejudicial.²⁶

§ 429. Construction of Particular Instructions

The rules relating to construction of instructions have been applied in construing instructions relating to various matters.

The rules relating to construction of instructions have been applied in construing instructions relating to burden of proof,²⁷ credibility of witnesses,²⁸ damages,²⁹ duty of the jury to find a verdict under both general and special charges,³⁰ negligence,³¹ ownership,³² plea of privilege,³³ sufficiency of pleadings,³⁴ undue influence,³⁵ and weight of evidence.³⁶ An instruction permitting a recovery under the declaration will be construed to mean as much of the declaration as was not excluded by the court.³⁷ An instruction that plaintiff is not required by law to prove all the counts of his declaration, but it is sufficient if he prove one or more of them as alleged therein by a preponderance of evidence, is not subject to an interpretation as permitting recovery if plaintiff proved one or two things in one or more of the various counts.³⁸ Particular words and phrases as used in instructions have also been construed.³⁹

2. CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE

§ 430. In General

Provided they are consistent with each other, all instructions given in a case should be read together as a whole, each in the light of the others, and if, when so construed, they properly state the law, they are not subject to exception.

Direction to read all instructions together

Where instructions are in direct conflict on a material factor, it is not helpful that trial court instructed jury that all instructions were to be read together, since jury could not follow two wholly inconsistent divergent lines which were directly in conflict.—Gillette v. City and County of San Francisco, 107 P.2d 627, 41 Cal. App.2d 758.

jury are told that all instructions are to be considered as a series or as a whole.⁴⁴ Where, however, an instruction is complete in itself, it must stand or fall on its own language.⁴⁵

§ 431. Errors and Omissions

In accordance with the rule that, where instructions considered as a whole correctly state the law, they are sufficient, a charge may be sustained although a part of the instructions considered alone may be erroneous or misleading; and an omission to state the entire law in one instruction is not error if the omission is reasonably supplied elsewhere.

In accordance with the rule, stated supra § 430, that, where instructions considered as a whole correctly state the law, they are sufficient, a charge may be sustained although a part of the instructions con-

All that is required of charge is that, as a whole, it convey to jury a clear and correct understanding of the law; every possible opportunity for misapprehension need not be guarded against and if charge fairly lays down law of the case, it is sufficient.—Cameron v. Evans, Minn., 62 N.W.2d 793.

Submission of question of law

In action on life policy to recover double indemnity for accidental death, an instruction authorizing jury to find that defendant issued a policy in which plaintiff was the beneficiary and that defendant therein agreed to pay a designated sum for accidental death was not erroneous as submitting a question of law where that part of instruction was followed by everything necessary for jury to find to make a case for plaintiff.—Gilpin v. peal must be satisfied, however, that the jury was not misled by the error in giving the instruction, to the prejudice of the complaining party,⁴⁸ and, where a prejudicially erroneous charge states an independent and positive rule of law, the principle of contextual interpretation does not apply.⁴⁹

§ 432. — Nature of Error or Omission

Where the charge, taken as a whole, correctly states the law it will not generally be held defective because one portion thereof is argumentative, vague, confusing, involved, or unclear, or because it does not state all of a rule of law, or gives undue prominence to particular facts or theories, or is too general, too broad, or too narrow.

Total Impact or Impression on Jury

In construing charge as a whole. It must be scrutinized and tested from standpoint of its total impact or impression on jury, and, if as a whole, its impact gives jury erroneous conception of controlling principles of law, it cannot be defended and be found sufficient as a whole by careful analysis of technical relationships of its various provisions to each other when such relationships would not reasonably have been apparent to jury.—Zurko v. Gilquist, Minn., 62 N.W.2d 351.

Instruction as a whole confusing

Where court at first erroneously stated the condition on which plaintiff would be entitled to a verdict but in the latter portion of the charge gave a correct instruction, and also refused a substantially correct and seasonably tendered request by way of correction, the instruction as a whole tended to the confusion of the jury, and was error.—Employers Liability Assur. Corp. v. Farquharson, 188 S.W.2d 965, 182 Tenn. 642.

54. Mich.—Pembor v. Marcus, 11 N. W.2d 889, 307 Mich. 279.

Where the charge, taken as a whole, correctly states the law, it will not, as a general rule, be held defective because one portion thereof is argumentative,⁵⁰ vague and indefinite,⁵¹ confusing,⁵² involved,⁵³ lacking in clarity,⁵⁴ seemingly misstates the law⁵⁵ or does not state all of a rule of law⁵⁶ with all its modifications or qualifications,⁵⁷ gives undue prominence to particular facts or theories,⁵⁸ is too general,⁵⁹ or too broad,⁶⁰ or is too narrow,⁶¹ is inaccurate because of the use of a double negative,⁶² or is objectionable because of the use of Latin words.⁶³

Failure to distinguish between plaintiff as personal representative and widow of decedent

In death action by widow of deceased, where instructions as a whole clearly set forth who plaintiff was and in behalf of whom action was brought, failure of one instruction to make a clear distinction between plaintiff as personal representative of estate of deceased and as widow of deceased was harmless.—Bush v. James, 40 N.W.2d 667, 152 Neb. 189.

64 C.J. p 972 note 79.

Improper or erroneous use of terms or phrases in a particular portion of the charge is, as a general rule, not ground for complaint where the instructions as a whole remedy the error.⁶⁴ Thus, where the charge is not objectionable as a whole, ordinarily it will not be rendered fatally defective because of a stenographic error in using "insufficient" for "sufficient,"⁶⁵ or the inadvertent use of the word "defendant" instead of "plaintiff,"⁶⁶ or "plaintiff" instead of "deceased,"⁶⁷ or instead of the name of an infant for whom plaintiff is suing as next friend.⁶⁸

§ 433. Issues and Theories of Case

If the charge as a whole is a fair and complete presentation of the issues and theories involved, error cannot, as a general rule, be predicated on a portion of the charge.

In accordance with the rules hereinbefore stated, if the charge as a whole is a fair and complete presentation of the issues and theories involved, error cannot, as a general rule, be predicated on a portion of the charge.⁶⁹

Failure to put proper emphasis on defense

Where instruction, if standing alone, was objectionable on ground that it did not put proper emphasis on defendants' defense, but other instructions were given that were sufficient in statement of defendant's theory of the case, and there was no substantial error in the instruction as a whole, there was no reversible error.—Logan v. tamentary capacity,⁸⁷ undue influence,⁸⁸ and waiver.⁸⁹

The rule has been held inapplicable where a verdict is authorized on an instruction purporting to cover the whole case but which omits an essential element of the cause of action,⁹⁰ or which omits references to the defenses pleaded and in evidence,⁹¹ or which ignores a material issue on which the evidence is in conflict.⁹² So, where an instruction, in express and positive terms, excludes material evidence from the consideration of the jury it is controlling,⁹³ and, it has been held, there is no reconciling it with other instructions.⁹⁴

§ 434. — Negligence, Contributory Negligence, and Assumption of Risk

- a. Negligence
- b. Contributory negligence
- c. Assumption of risk

a. Negligence

Instructions on the issue of negligence are, as a general rule, sufficient if, when considered together, they fully and fairly present the case.

In accordance with the general rules hereinbefore stated, instructions on the issue of negligence are, as a general rule, sufficient if, when considered together, they fully and fairly present the issue.⁹⁵

tort-feasors.³

Instructions on the issue of negligence cannot be sustained, however, if when construed together, they are confusing or misleading,⁴ or omit an essential element.⁵

b. Contributory Negligence

If instructions as to contributory negligence properly

state the law when construed together, they will be held sufficient, although a portion of the charge when taken alone may be objectionable.

If instructions as to contributory negligence properly state the law, when construed together, they will be held sufficient.⁶ This is true even though a portion of the charge when taken alone may be objectionable because it is misleading,⁷ confusing,⁸ uncertain,⁹ or discriminatory;¹⁰ or because it is too broad,¹¹ or too narrow,¹² or is inconsistent with other instructions given;¹³ or because it ignores the defense¹⁴ or eliminates it,¹⁵ imposes too low a degree of care,¹⁶ omits the effect of plaintiff's knowledge of danger,¹⁷ or fails to require that contributory negligence be the proximate cause.¹⁸

Last clear chance. In accordance with the general rules, in determining the sufficiency of a charge on the doctrine of last clear chance, the entire charge on such subject should be considered,¹⁹ and it will not be held objectionable if, when so considered, it properly states the law.²⁰

c. Assumption of Risk

A charge on assumption of risk is sufficient if it properly states the defense when the instructions are considered as a whole.

Under the rules hereinbefore stated, a charge on assumption of risk is sufficient if it properly states the defense when the instructions are considered as a whole.²¹

§ 435. Evidence

A particular instruction as to the evidence, which standing alone might be defective or inaccurate, may be sufficient when considered with other instructions correctly stating the law.

A particular instruction as to the evidence, which standing alone might be defective or inaccurate, may be sufficient when considered with other instructions correctly stating the law.²² This rule has been applied where the instruction was defective as misleading,²³ or as authorizing the jury to ignore evidence²⁴ or rely on their own knowledge or experience in reaching a verdict.²⁵

§ 436. — Presumptions and Burden of Proof

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof

a. Presumptions

An instruction or a portion of an instruction as to presumptions will not be held fatally erroneous if the charge taken as a whole is sufficient, even though particular portions of the charge may be misleading.

An instruction or a portion of an instruction as to presumptions will not be held fatally erroneous if the charge taken as a whole is sufficient,²⁶ although particular portions of the charge may be objectionable as misleading.²⁷

Res ipsa loquitur. In conformity with the general rules hereinbefore stated, particular instructions presenting the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur have been held sufficient or not erroneous when considered with the charge as a whole.²⁸

Instructions on the burden of proof as to particular issues are usually sufficient if, when taken as a whole, they correctly state the law.

Instructions on the burden of proof as to particular issues are usually sufficient, if, when taken as a whole, they correctly state the law.²⁹ Accordingly, a particular instruction as to the burden of proof may be sufficient when taken in connection with the charge as a whole although when standing alone it might be misleading³⁰ or confusing,³¹ or although it imposes the burden of proof on the wrong party³² or places a greater burden on one of the parties than the law warrants.³³ A failure to charge on the burden of proof in a particular instruction is immaterial when the charge as a whole sufficiently covers the matter.³⁴

The instructions as to the burden of proof cannot be sustained, however, where, when considered as a whole, they are erroneous and materially prejudicial.³⁵

§ 437. — Weight and Sufficiency

Instructions are, as a general rule, sufficient if, when considered as a whole, they correctly indicate the character of evidence necessary to establish the facts and the degree of conviction which such evidence must produce.

Instructions are, as a general rule, sufficient if, when considered as a whole, they correctly indicate the character of the evidence necessary to establish the facts and the degree of conviction which such evidence must produce.³⁶ Accordingly, a particular instruction as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence may be unobjectionable when considered with the charge as a whole although standing alone it is misleading,³⁷ loose and indefinite,³⁸ or ambiguous;³⁹ or although it confines the jury to the testimony of witnesses and excludes the consideration of documentary evidence,⁴⁰ or requires a lesser⁴¹ or greater⁴² degree of proof than that required by law, or violates the rule relating to the disparity of witnesses,⁴³ or is not applicable to the case,⁴⁴ or permits the jury to ignore evidence,⁴⁵ or restricts the proof available for consideration to a party's own evidence.⁴⁶ The error is prejudicial, however, where the erroneous portion of the charge conflicts with a correct statement of the rule in another part of the charge resulting in confusion.⁴⁷

The previous rules have been applied to instructions on circumstantial evidence,⁴⁸ expert testimony,⁴⁹ and preponderance of evidence.⁵⁰

§ 438. Invasion of Province of Jury

A charge which, taken as a whole, correctly submits the issues to the jury will not be held objectionable because certain instructions, taken in their severalty, may be subject to the criticism that they invade the province of the jury.

On the other hand, where an instruction is given to the jury as an absolute guide in determining the damages, the rule requiring the instructions to be read together is inapplicable.⁸⁰

§ 440. Definition and Application of Terms

In determining the sufficiency of a definition in a charge, the charge must be considered as a whole, and segregating one part with respect to a term and subjecting it to a meticulous analysis does not establish error if the treatment of the term in the whole charge is sufficient adequately to guide the jury.

In determining the sufficiency of a definition in a charge, the charge must be considered as a whole, and segregating one part with respect to a term and subjecting it to a meticulous analysis does not establish error if the treatment of the term in the whole charge both by definition and application is sufficient adequately to guide the jury.⁸¹ These rules have been applied to instructions defining or omitting to define condition as distinguished from cause,⁸² contributory negligence,⁸³ embezzlement,⁸⁴ malice,⁸⁵ material fact,⁸⁶ negligence,⁸⁷ nuisance,⁸⁸ and proximate cause.⁸⁹

3. CURE OF ERROR

§ 441. By Other Instructions

Generally an erroneous instruction is not cured by the mere giving of correct instructions necessarily inconsistent therewith, although if the instruction is defective merely, in that it is inaccurate, misleading, confusing, or incomplete, it may be cured by another instruction.

A correct instruction will cure the error in another only where the instructions, as a series, state the law correctly,⁹⁰ and it is evident that no harm has been done by the erroneous instruction.⁹¹ Otherwise, in order to obviate the effect thereof, the erroneous instruction must be expressly withdrawn from the jury⁹² or the erroneous instruc-

In accordance with these rules it has been held that a correct general charge will not cure an erroneous specific instruction,⁴ and that a correct special charge will not cure an erroneous main charge in conflict therewith.⁵ Neither will a correct written charge cure an erroneous oral charge,⁶ nor will a correct oral charge cure an erroneous written instruction.⁷ An error in an instruction will not be cured by another erroneous instruction⁸ or by an instruction referring to an entirely different matter,⁹ and the rule is particularly true where the subsequent instruction accentuates the error.¹⁰ There can be no cure of error by reading the instructions together where none of the instructions given is sufficient to supply the defect in erroneous instructions.¹¹

An erroneous unequivocal instruction is not cured by an equivocal explanation likely to be misunderstood,¹² nor can a short erroneous instruction be cured by a long complicated one.¹³ Where, however, it appears that the correct instruction must have so preponderated in the consideration of the jury that the erroneous instruction neither contributed to, nor controlled, the verdict, the charge may be upheld.¹⁴ A charge of the court, which, considered as a whole, is intemperate, cannot be neutralized by the simple warning to be careful not to do defendant an injustice.¹⁵

On the other hand or in other cases if an instruction is defective merely,¹⁶ in that the instruction is writing;²⁷ it may be cured by another instruction, although it has been held that this rule can be applied only in very plain cases entirely free from doubt.²⁸

It has been stated that whether erroneous instructions are cured by other correct instructions is a question for the discretion of the trial court,²⁹ although where the instruction complained of is not erroneous, and, as supplemented by the other instructions, manifestly could not be misleading or confusing, the trial court is not vested with discretion to declare it so.³⁰

Where an instruction purports to sum up all the facts, the proof of which will warrant a verdict for a party, the instruction must be correct, and, if erroneous or incomplete, it is not susceptible of cure by any other instructions,³¹ unless such instruction properly refers to, and incorporates within its terms, other given instructions which properly submit such omitted elements.³² A binding,³³ mandatory,³⁴ or peremptory³⁵ instruction, or one directing a verdict,³⁶ if erroneous or incomplete, cannot be cured by any other instructions.

Thus, where matters of affirmative defense are not incorporated in plaintiff's instruction purporting to cover the whole case, the weight of authority is that such omission cannot be cured by other instructions.³⁷ Where, however, an instruction which

"If you find for the plaintiff"

Where one instruction set out elements necessary to a finding for plaintiff, instruction which immediately followed, telling jury what to take into consideration in arriving at amount of verdict, was not in effect a direction to find for plaintiff merely because it was not prefaced with words such as "if you find for the plaintiff."—*St. Vincent's Sanitarium v. In Missouri

(1) It has been held repeatedly as an established rule that, where an instruction on behalf of plaintiff au-

merely purports to cover the whole of a party's case omits some feature which is not essential to such case, it has been held that the omission is cured by an instruction given for the other party.³⁸ Accordingly, where the issue of defendant's counterclaim³⁹ or set-off⁴⁰ is fully and sufficiently covered by other instructions, there is no ground for complaint. Even where an instruction purports to cover the entire case and directs a verdict, it has been held that a slight obscurity or ambiguity in the charge may be cured by other instructions.⁴¹ There can be no cure of error by reading the instructions together if the same fault is common to all instructions purporting to cover the whole case.⁴² Although it has been held that a so-called "formula" instruction, if it fails to state all the essential elements to a recovery, is not cured by other instructions,⁴³ it has also been held that the rigid rules formerly applicable to formula instructions have been greatly modified in recent years,⁴⁴ and, thus, where the error or omission is fully, fairly, and correctly covered by other instructions and it is obvious that the jury was not misled, the error or omission is not prejudicial.⁴⁵

§ 442. — Issues and Theories of Case in General

Instructions on the issues or theories of the case which are merely defective may be cured by correct instructions.

While erroneous instructions on the issues or theories of the case are not cured by correct instructions which are inconsistent or conflicting,⁴⁶ instructions which are merely defective may be cured by correct instructions.⁴⁷

thorizes recovery on a finding by the jury of all the affirmative facts necessary for such recovery, omitting mention of defenses urged by defendant, such instruction is erroneous, but may be cured where such matters of defense are supplied by instructions given on behalf of defendant.—Griffith v. b. Contributory Negligence

While an erroneous instruction on the issue of contributory negligence cannot be cured by a conflicting instruction which correctly states the law, an instruction which is merely defective or inaccurate may be cured by another instruction.

In accordance with the general rules already stated supra § 441, a correct instruction on the issue of contributory negligence will cure the error in another instruction only when the instructions, as a series, state the law correctly.⁴³ Accordingly, an erroneous instruction on the issue of contributory negligence cannot be cured by a conflicting instruction which correctly states the law;⁴⁴ by an indefinite,⁴⁵ vague, or uncertain⁴⁶ instruction; by an instruction on an entirely different matter;⁴⁷ or by an instruction which accentuates the error.⁴⁸

On the other hand, and in accordance with the rules hereinbefore stated, a particular instruction as to contributory negligence which is merely defective or inaccurate may be cured by another instruction.⁴⁹ This rule has been applied with

Last clear chance or humanitarian doctrine. In accordance with the rules heretofore stated, a defective or inaccurate instruction on the doctrine of last clear chance or the humanitarian doctrine,⁶⁸ or an instruction which omits reference to the doctrine⁶⁹ may be cured by an instruction correctly stating the doctrine, providing the instructions as a series state the law correctly.⁷⁰

c. Assumption of Risk

As a general rule erroneous instructions ignoring or eliminating the defense of assumption of risk may be cured by other instructions sufficiently presenting the defense.

Providing the instruction does not purport to cover the whole case, as discussed supra § 441, a particular instruction which ignores the defense of assumption of risk⁷¹ or apparently eliminates the defense,⁷² or which is defective or inaccurate,⁷³ as misleading,⁷⁴ confusing,⁷⁵ or abstract,⁷⁶ may, under general rules already considered, be cured by correct,⁷⁷ nonconflicting⁷⁸ instructions sufficiently presenting the defense.

§ 444. — Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Presumptions
- c. Burden of proof
- d. Weight and sufficiency

a. In General

Instructions relating to the evidence, which are defective or inaccurate, may be cured by other instructions correctly stating the law.

Under the rules already stated supra § 441, instructions relating to the evidence, which are defective or inaccurate, may be cured by other instructions correctly stating the law.⁷⁹ Accordingly, an instruction which fails to limit the effect of evidence,⁸⁰ or which might authorize the jury to ignore all or part of the evidence,⁸¹ may be corrected by other instructions, providing the instructions as a series correctly state the law.⁸²

Erroneous instructions with respect to presumptions may be cured by other instructions correctly stating the law.

A particular instruction with respect to presumptions which might be objectionable as defective or inaccurate,⁸³ or which might be open to the ob-

(2) In action against railroad for damage to automobile resulting from grade crossing collision, giving of charge substantially in the terms of the statute, placing on railroad burden to show absence of negligence, was not reversible error for failure to point out that actionable negligence must have been proximate cause of collision, where other given charges fully covered the point.—Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Moundville Motor Co., 4 So.2d 305, 241 Ala. 633.

(3) An instruction quoting statute making any speed in excess of twenty miles per hour in business district or thirty miles per hour in residential district prima facie evidence that such speed was unlawful was not erroneous for failure to state that burden of proving negligence as proximate cause remained on plaintiff pedestrian where that issue was fully covered by other instructions.—Vogel v. Ridens, 44 N.E.2d 238, 112 Ind.App. 493.

(4) In action for injuries sustained in truck collision, court did not commit prejudicial error in charging that plaintiff's recovery required that negligence of driver of defendant's truck must be proved to be the proximate cause of collision, in view of further instructions, as against contention that if plaintiff was a guest or passenger in truck in which he was riding and not engaged in common enterprise with driver thereof, negligence of drivers of both trucks might have concurred in proximately causing collision without barring plaintiff's recovery.—Solomon v. Shepard Co., 200 A. 993, 61 R.I. 332, applying Massachusetts law.

(2) Instruction requiring guest to establish by preponderance of evidence that defendant motorist's negligence was "the" proximate cause of guest's injury was not erroneous as imposing on guest burden of establishing that defendant's negligence was sole cause of accident, in view of other instruction.—Rainey v. Rielse, 257 N.W. 346, 219 Iowa 164.

"Malice in law"

Where jury in action for alienation of affections of plaintiff's husband were fully instructed on "malice in fact" as defined by Penal Code, and other elements necessary to recovery of punitive damages, instruction giving a broad and general definition of "malice in law," if erroneous, was harmless.—Fitzpatrick v. "New and independent cause"

(1) Failure of court to mention "new and independent cause" in its definition of "proximate cause" was not error, if evidence raised issue of new and independent cause, where court defined such term in the next succeeding paragraph of his charge, and in the next succeeding paragraph defined legal terms "new" and "independent."—Jones v. McIlvene, Tex. Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 503, error dismissed.

(2) In city fireman's action against gas company for injuries caused by explosion of natural gas escaping into burning building, instruction defining new and independent cause was not objectionable because of failure to include word "omission" in view of definition by court of new and independent force in which it was stated that by such term was meant an event, since the word "event" is broad enough to include an omission.—Texas Cities Gas Co. v. Dickens, Civ. App., 156 S.W.2d 1010, affirmed 168 S.W.2d 208, 140 Tex. 433.

(3) In personal injury suit, failure to embrace term "new and independent cause" in definition of "proximate cause" was harmless, where court gave correct definition of "new and independent cause" and applied effect of definition in submitting special issue, and where only issue of "new and independent cause" was concretely submitted to jury.—City of Terrell v. Howard, Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 283, reversed on other grounds 111 S.W.2d 692, 130 Tex. 459.

"Remote cause" and "mere condition"

In motorists' action for injuries resulting from intersectional collision, alleged error of trial court in failing to define terms "remote cause" and "mere condition" used in an instruction was harmless, where trial court defined "negligence" and "proximate cause," and stated necessity of proving proximate cause by a preponderance of the evidence.—Girardi v. A. ATTENDANCE AND CUSTODY IN GENERAL

§ 449. In General

Questions relating to the attendance, custody, conduct, and deliberations of the jury are discussed infra §§ 450-484.

§ 450. Presence of Jury during Proceedings

It is within the discretion of the court whether or not the jury will be sent out while arguments on legal questions are in progress before the court, or at the time when another verdict is being returned by another jury in another case.

While questions of law are exclusively for the court as discussed supra § 203, and it is unnecessary that the jury be present when exceptions to the legal rulings of the court are taken or allowed,¹⁸ it is largely within the discretion of the presiding judge whether or not the jury will be sent out while arguments on legal questions are in progress before the court,¹⁹ although it is said to be the safer and better practice to exclude the jury in such instances.²⁰ If it is apparent or probable that a legal discussion or argument will be prejudicial, if made in the presence of the jury, a timely request for withdrawal of the jury should be made.²¹

After being requested to do so, failure to remove the jury during argument on a motion for a directed verdict may be reversible error where their presence is highly prejudicial to the substantial rights of the complaining party,²² and it has been said to be irregular and improper for the court to call on counsel, in the presence of the jury, to waive any legal right whatever;²³ and a charge that the other party has been tampering with the witnesses should not be made in the presence of the jury.²⁴ The refusal to exclude the jury at the time another verdict is being returned by another jury in another case is within the discretion of the court.²⁵

Where so required by statute, the jury should, during their deliberations, be placed under the charge of the proper officer of the court,²⁶ except where they reach their verdict without retiring,²⁷ and even then if they are left alone by the court in the court room.²⁸

Interested officers. Officers who are interested in the result of the suit should not personally attend the jury during their deliberations,²⁹ and in such a case the court may appoint a special officer to attend the jury during the trial.³⁰ However, a constable who has levied on property under execution, and has been sole witness for the judgment creditor in proceedings claiming the property levied on, is not disqualified to attend the jury in such proceedings,³¹ nor is a bailiff necessarily disqualified to act in his official capacity as custodian of the jury by reason of the fact that he testified in the case,³² especially where it is not contended that all of the facts were not known until before the verdict, or that defendant suffered any injury, or that plaintiff communicated with the jury with respect to the case.³³

Oath of officer. While the court may properly administer a special oath to the officer put in charge of the jury,³⁴ in the absence of an express statutory requirement otherwise the official oath of the officer is sufficient and no special oath need be administered.³⁵

- a. Under direction or leave of court
- b. Without direction or leave of court
- c. Asking counsel whether they object to separation

a. Under Direction or Leave of Court

- (1) Before final submission
- (2) After final submission

(1) Before Final Submission

It is generally held that it is largely within the discretion of the court, before the case has been finally submitted, to permit the jury to separate during adjournments of the court for necessary rest and refreshments or where further consideration of the case is postponed for several days.

At early common law jurors were kept together as a body as prisoners of the court³⁶ and were not allowed to separate³⁷ until they had reached a verdict. While the court has full power to take such steps toward holding the jury together as are necessary to secure a fair trial,³⁸ it is generally held, either with³⁹ or without⁴⁰ statutory authorization, that it is largely within the discretion of the court, before the case has finally been submitted, to permit the jury to separate, during adjournments of the court for necessary rest and refreshments, or where further consideration of the case is postponed for several days.⁴¹ The separation may be allowed without counsels' consent,⁴² and even over objection.⁴³ Permitting several of the jurors to go to a closet outside of the court room, in custody of an officer of the court, is not improper;⁴⁴ and permitting two jurors to sit in another case during an adjournment has been held not an abuse of discretion where the trial of the first case was not delayed and the two cases involved no questions in common.⁴⁵

Although the practice of allowing the jury to separate after the case is submitted to them should not be encouraged, it has been held that the court may, on its own initiative, permit the jury to separate, and such separation is not error where no serious prejudice is shown.

Generally, after the cause has been submitted and the jury charged, the jury must be kept together in charge of a sworn officer until they agree on a verdict.⁴⁶ While some decisions seem to require consent, or lack of objection, by the parties,⁴⁷ and although the practice should not be encouraged,⁴⁸ it has been held either with⁴⁹ or without⁵⁰ statutory authority that the court may, on its own initiative, permit the jury to separate after the case has been submitted and before an agreement has been reached, and such separation is not error where no serious prejudice is shown. Permitting one of the jurors, after retirement and before a verdict has been agreed on, to go to another room in charge of an officer and telephone instructions to an employee will not vitiate the verdict.⁵¹ If, during deliberations of the jury, one of the jurors becomes ill, he may, under the charge of the officer, be separated from the jury and given the services of a physician,⁵² but as soon as it becomes apparent that it will be necessary to separate one of the jurors from the others because of physical indisposition it is the proper course to instruct the jury that during the time of such separation further discussion of the case should be dispensed with.⁵³ It is in effect a discharge of the jury for failure to agree for the officer in charge, pursuant to the instructions of the court, to allow the jury to separate on their failure to agree late at night, and the jury cannot thereafter be reconvened, allowed to deliberate, and reach a verdict.⁵⁴

After agreement or verdict reached. Although it has been held that every effort should be made to avoid the practice of permitting the jurors to seal their verdicts, and to disperse, and remain at large before the verdict is taken in open court,⁵⁵ the jury are generally allowed to seal a verdict and separate,⁵⁶ and it is usually held to be within the discretion of the court to direct that the jury, if they reach an agreement or verdict while the court is adjourned, may return a sealed verdict and separate until the court reconvenes,⁵⁷ especially where such a course is agreed to by the parties.⁵⁸ The fact that the permission is given by the court in the absence or without the consent of counsel will not vitiate the verdict if no prejudice is shown,⁵⁹ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁶⁰ Giving the jury permission to disperse if they agree during an adjournment, even without the consent of counsel, and without a direction to return a sealed verdict, will not vitiate the verdict if there is no ground to suspect that the jury have been improperly tampered with or the verdict affected by intervening circumstances.⁶¹

b. Without Direction or Leave of Court

Separation of the jury, without authorization or consent of the court, will not vitiate the verdict if there is no prejudice shown and the verdict is not induced by improper influence exerted after the separation.

Although an unauthorized separation may constitute a contempt of court for which punishment may be imposed, as discussed in Contempt § 22, separation of the jury, without consent of the court, after they have agreed on their verdict but before it is rendered, will not vitiate the verdict so as to prevent the court from receiving it if there is no prejudice shown and the verdict is not induced by improper influence exerted after the separation.⁶² Although it has been held otherwise,⁶³ even the fact of an unauthorized separation before an agreement has been reached will not vitiate the verdict subsequently reached and rendered where the jurors were not tampered with or their verdict affected thereby.⁶⁴ However, it has been held that there is gross misconduct justifying a reversal where a jury, authorized to make a sealed verdict and disperse, merely seal up a piece of paper stating that they cannot agree and then disperse.⁶⁵ Temporary absence of a juror from the jury room, without permission of the court, affords no ground for disturbing the verdict, when there is no misconduct on his part with respect to the cause on trial.⁶⁶

It is not error for the court to ask counsel, in the hearing of the jury, whether there is any objection to separation of the jury where no resulting prejudice is shown.

While it is said not to be good practice for the court to ask counsel, in the hearing of the jury, whether there is any objection to separation of the jury,⁶⁷ such action by the court is not error where no resulting prejudice is shown.⁶⁸

§ 454. — Admonition to Jury on Separation

Where the jurors are permitted to separate, the court should inform them as to their duties and as to the punishment for the violation thereof.

Where the jurors are permitted to separate, the court should inform them as to their duties and as to the punishment for the violation thereof,⁶⁹ and the jury may⁷⁰ and should⁷¹ be admonished by the court not to hold conversations among themselves or with other persons about the case. However, such requirement is waived if the parties by consent permit the jury to separate without requesting an admonition,⁷² and failure to admonish is not error where no prejudice could possibly have resulted therefrom.⁷³ If the jury are being retired under instructions that they may separate for a definite period if they have not reached a verdict by a given time, and they are properly admonished at the time of retirement, it is not necessary that the admonition be repeated before actual separation.⁷⁴ Where a juror during a prior adjournment has disobeyed the admonition of the court, and conversed with other persons, it is not error for the court, on admonishing the jury as to their conduct during a subsequent adjournment, to state that its attention had been called to the misconduct of the juror, that it was highly improper, and that it hoped it would not happen again.⁷⁵

B. CONDUCT OF JURORS AND OTHERS AFFECTING THEM GENERALLY

Although misconduct of or affecting jurors does not vitiate a verdict if it is not of a substantial character and such as to be prejudicial to the complaining party, where the misconduct is prompted or participated in by an interested person or party, the verdict is usually held to be vitiated without a showing of prejudice.

"Misconduct of the jury" is a legal phrase meaning an unlawful or unauthorized act done by the jury, or any of its members, in connection with the trial,⁷⁶ and it does not necessarily imply an evil or corrupt motive on the part of the jury or the prevailing party.⁷⁷ The court should be exceedingly vigilant that there is no misconduct on the part of jurors reflecting any question on the honesty of their performance.⁷⁸ Any charge of misconduct of the jury must turn on the circumstances of the particular case,⁷⁹ and whether a mistrial should be granted because of such conduct is within the discretion of the trial court.⁸⁰ Mere irregularities which would subject the juror to censure will not overturn the verdict if there is no reason to suspect that the final result has been unduly influenced;⁸¹

and, although scrupulous conduct of jurors, parties, and counsel is necessary in maintaining the purity of the jury trial,⁸² misconduct of or affecting jurors does not vitiate the verdict if it is not of a substantial character and such as to be prejudicial to the complaining party.⁸³

In order to be effective the verdict must be free from outside influence of whatsoever kind or nature,⁸⁴ and where the misconduct is prompted or participated in by an interested party or person a more strict rule is applied and the verdict is usually held to be vitiated without a showing of prejudice⁸⁵ or motive.⁸⁶ Even misconduct of jurors alone will usually result in a reversal if there is a reasonable probability that it was prejudicial to the complaining party,⁸⁷ although some cases contain language which would require an affirmative showing of prejudice before the verdict would be vitiated.⁸⁸

Conduct of parties, relatives, or friends. Parties,⁸⁹ their relatives,⁹⁰ and friends⁹¹ must refrain from all conduct which would raise the slightest

Where acquaintance approached juror and volunteered that he knew how acquaintance and juror could make a lot of money, but juror immediately discontinued conversation and at first opportunity informed clerk of court and then trial judge, who was informed by juror that incident would not prejudice his mind against either side, refusing to declare mistrial was not abuse of discretion.—Washington Times Co. v. suspicion that they are intermeddling with the jurors improperly to influence the verdict. Nothing should be permitted, which can be prevented, which would raise even a suggestion of undue influence on a juror,⁹² and any conduct of a party improperly to induce a jury to decide in his favor will be so dealt with by the court that he will not be permitted to retain the benefits of a verdict so obtained.⁹³ It is misconduct requiring a reversal for a party, during recess and absence of the court, to put before the jury evidence which the court has previously ruled out as inadmissible.⁹⁴ However, it is not ground for reversal that plaintiff in a personal injury case became prostrated during the trial, in the presence of jurors, so that the attendance of physicians in the court room was necessary, where it does not appear that the attack was simulated or the symptoms intentionally manifested.⁹⁵

Conduct of officers. In general, the courts will not countenance or tolerate any act or conduct by court officers which might influence the conduct of any member of a jury in favor of either party in reaching conclusions in the case they are considering,⁹⁶ and misconduct of the officer which has a tendency to influence the jury in their deliberations will vitiate the verdict.⁹⁷ Where the officer having charge of the jury in a personal action takes them for a walk past the scene of the accident, such misconduct is ground for reversal, since it is in effect the introduction of further testimony after the case has been submitted to the jury.⁹⁸ However, it is not error that the officer in charge of a jury, investigating the scene of a railroad accident by permission of court, takes it on himself to demonstrate how far deceased might have been seen along the track by placing on the track a garment worn by deceased when injured.⁹⁹

should, at all times, be solicitous to preserve not only the substance of justice, but every appearance of propriety, and they should keep away from jurors during recesses and intermissions and have no conversations with them beyond the usual salutations.¹ It is improper for counsel, without the knowledge or consent of the court, to give to the jury papers or other things relating to the case to be taken to the jury room,² and it has been held improper for counsel during his argument to give to the jury papers relating to the case, even though the court overrules the other party's objection thereto and the jury are required to return the papers to the court after examining them.³

Waiver of misconduct. Where a party agrees to discharge a juror charged with improper conduct, and to proceed with the trial with eleven jurors, he thereby waives any objection he might have made because of the conduct of such juror.⁴ Misconduct can be waived by express agreement,⁵ or, if the complaining party knows of the misconduct at a time when the irregularity can be cured by the trial court, a failure to object in time so that this may be done operates as a waiver of the irregularity so that it cannot thereafter be urged as a ground for vitiating the verdict, as discussed infra § 483.

§ 456. Taking of Notes and Memoranda by Jurors

If they do not thereby consume too much time, it is not improper for the jury to take notes of what is said, or occurs, during the trial.

If they do not thereby consume too much time, it is not improper for the jury to take notes of what is said, or occurs, during the trial,⁶ or to make, with permission of the court, memoranda of the articles in suit and the value placed thereon by the evidence.⁷ Counsel has no absolute right to have the jury take notes at his dictation, and the trial court in its discretion may refuse to allow this to be done.⁸ However, although the jurors may take notes, it is error for the court, without the request of either litigant and over their objections, to suggest that the jurors might take notes and to furnish to each juror, without such juror's request, the necessary materials therefor with instructions as to how the notes should be kept during the trial.⁹

Jurors must be protected against any extraneous contact which would tend to influence the verdict, and no one should have access to the jury for any purpose save as directly ordered by the court.

Jurors must be protected against any extraneous contact which would tend to influence the verdict,¹⁰

and no one should have access to the jury for any purpose save as directly ordered by the court.¹¹ It is misconduct for a juror to discuss with others during the trial the matter under investigation,¹² and the court should thoroughly inform the jury as to the measure of their obligations and responsibilities of speaking to or permitting anyone to speak to them about the case on trial and that a violation of these duties will be punished,¹³ and the court should unhesitatingly punish disobedience of these admonitions.¹⁴ A juror should report to the court any conversation designed or having a tendency to influence the verdict,¹⁵ and the court should take such action as in its judgment is warranted.¹⁶ When a motion for a mistrial is made because of a conversation between a juror and another person, the trial court should make inquiry to determine if the motion is well founded,¹⁷ and whether it should declare a mistrial because of such conversation is within the sound discretion of the trial court.¹⁸

The court may grant a mistrial because of remarks about the case made in the hearing of jurors if it believes the incident may have or probably influenced the jury to the prejudice of either party,¹⁹ and the verdict will generally be set aside if jurors, while they are separated from the rest, converse with other persons about the cause,²⁰ or

Discretion held not abused

(1) Where conversation between a juror and persons not members of jury, was casual, was not instigated by plaintiffs or anyone represented by, or connected with, plaintiffs, and neither plaintiffs nor anyone represented by, or connected with, plaintiffs participated in conversation, and general tenor of conversation was as favorable to defendant as to the plaintiffs, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for mistrial made because of the conversation.—Genuario v. Finkler, 72 A.2d 67, 136 Conn. 500.

(2) Where trial court found that statements made by juror during trial to third person were not of a character which would justify sustaining a challenge on suspicion of prejudice against or partially for defendants, court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to declare a mistrial for the alleged misconduct.—Weaver v. Gale, Ohio App., 91 N.E.2d 808.

(3) When juror was approached by stranger who stated that if juror wanted to know anything about case the juror should ask stranger, who was former secretary of bank which was a party to action, and juror refused to discuss matter with stranger and did not communicate the suggestion to any other juror and was in no way influenced by suggestion, refusal to declare a mistrial was not abuse of discretion.—*First Nat. hold an unexplained conversation with unknown persons which might well have been prejudicial to the complaining party.²¹ It is absolutely essential that there be no jury tampering,²² and an attempt of third persons to bribe jurors will vitiate the verdict irrespective of whether the attempt was successful.²³

It has been held, however, that the verdict is not vitiated by a juror's telling a totally disinterested person, pending the trial, of the juror's views with respect to certain evidence in the case, where no efforts were made improperly to influence the juror;²⁴ and the verdict is not vitiated by conversations with third persons which have no relation to the case and no influence on the verdict²⁵ or by casual remarks made by bystanders about the case in the presence of the jury,²⁶ or the fact that a person not a juror was in the jury box and in the jury room when they retired, pending argument of a motion, his presence being due to a mistake on his part and no communications having passed between him and the jurors.²⁷

After the cause has been submitted and the jury have been charged, the jury must be prevented from communicating with other persons until they have agreed on a verdict,²⁸ and statutes prohibiting communications to the jury are mandatory.²⁹ Furthermore, all persons other than the jurors themselves are not permitted to know the state of the jury's deliberations before the verdict is returned.³⁰

During intermission in deliberations the jury are entitled to the same safeguards and protection as though they were in the jury room.³¹

b. Parties, Their Friends, and Relatives

As a general rule, the verdict will be vitiated by the fact that jurors, during the trial, have received treats, favors, or entertainment from a party, or have conversed about the case with a party, his friends, or relatives, or have had familiar associations with interested persons.

Jurors and parties should keep strictly aloof from each other.³² Every precaution, by observation and admonition, should be taken to prevent association, lengthy conversations, and social contact, between a party and jurors during the trial,³³ and, when it is brought to the attention of the court that any person interested in the result of the cause on trial is attempting to court favor with the jurors by any sort of attention, a prompt and sufficient rebuke should be administered.³⁴ Whether a mistrial should be declared because of communications between a juror and a party or his relative is within the sound discretion of the trial court.³⁵

Trial court properly denied motion for a mistrial for misconduct, in that one of two jurors who had been excused from panel stated to assistant of plaintiff's attorney that he hoped defendant would lose, and that the two excused jurors were subsequently seen together with a juror hearing the case, where no prejudice was shown, and it was not shown that plaintiff's attorney or assistant had any contact with jurors hearing the case, or that either excused juror had communicated to juror trying case, any desire that defendant lose case.—*Sances v. Discretion held not abused

(1) Refusal to discharge jury because of plaintiff's conversation with juror in which plaintiff stated he knew people whom juror asked him about was not abuse of discretion.—Winters v. Hassenbusch, Mo.App., 89 S.W.2d 546.

(2) Where one of plaintiffs talked with one or more jurors in the corridor during a short recess, the trial judge abused his discretion in denying a motion for mistrial, even though no one had been prejudiced.—Gall v. New York & New Brunswick

If jurors and a party meet under circumstances from which injury to a party may be reasonably apprehended, a verdict for the party engaging in the intercourse cannot be sustained,³⁶ and as a general rule the verdict will be vitiated by the fact that jurors, during the trial, have received treats, favors, or entertainment from the successful party,³⁷ or have conversed about the case with the party,³⁸ his friends,³⁹ or relatives,⁴⁰ or have had familiar associations with interested persons.⁴¹ It is also fatal to the verdict that the successful party, while the jury are inspecting the premises under charge of an officer, seeks, against the instructions of the court, to intrude and show the jury matters favorable to him,⁴² and witnesses engage in arguments about the case in front of the jury as they are inspecting the premises,⁴³ or that a party, although forbidden to do so by the court, keeps up a conversation in a low tone with one of the jurors while adverse counsel is addressing the jury.⁴⁴

Brief, public, and nonprejudicial conversations between jurors and parties or their relatives will not vitiate the verdict⁴⁵ or require that the jury be discharged,⁴⁶ and a mistrial is properly denied where the conversation was conceived in innocence and related to a matter entirely foreign to the case.⁴⁷ Further, it has been held that, where it is shown not to have been unduly influenced, the verdict is not vitiated because a juror, pending the trial, accepts a ride to his home in the conveyance of a party who is going in the same direction,⁴⁸ or because the foreman of the jury lodges in the same hotel room as defendant in the case.⁴⁹ There is nothing improper in the jury being sent to eat, in charge of an officer, at public expense, at a hotel owned by counsel in the case, who is also related to his successful client, and owns the only hotel in town.⁵⁰ Although such conduct is not proper, it has been held that the verdict is not vitiated because a juror assists plaintiff down the courthouse stairs where the juror acted in good faith, and it did not appear that he had secured any damaging information by so doing.⁵¹

c. Attorneys and Agents of Parties

As a general rule any conversations between jurors and attorneys engaged in the trial of the cause are improper, and it is misconduct which will vitiate the verdict for a juror to receive treats, entertainment, or favors from the attorney for one of the parties, or for an investigator engaged in the case to mingle with and have a conversation with a juror.

Where a defendant took seat at coffee shop during court recess beside juror and ordered cup of coffee and juror paid for the defendant's coffee, but defendant did not communicate with juror and did not know juror or that he intended to pay for his coffee or that he had done so until juror casually informed him of it, and juror did not know defendant had anything to do with the trial, incident did not constitute misconduct.—*Airline Motor Coaches v. Decision made by juror prior to favor in the trial of the cause are improper, since no matter what a conversation or communication may relate to, it is apt to arouse suspicion and lessen confidence.⁵² Whether the jury should be discharged or a mistrial declared is within the discretion of the trial court.⁵³ However, counsel may, with the permission of the court, converse with a juror, whom he intends to make a witness, to ascertain what facts he can prove.⁵⁴ Moreover, it is generally held that the verdict will not be vitiated by temporary or casual associations or conversations between jurors and counsel which are satisfactorily explained and shown to be nonprejudicial,⁵⁵ or because a juror, during a recess in the trial, converses with an agent of one of the parties if the conversation is open, brief, casual, and has no reference to the case,⁵⁶ or because a detective, employed by one of the parties to obtain information about jurors, inquires of a juror whether the case has been decided, but ceases further conversation on being informed that it has not.⁵⁷ The rule, which vitiates the verdict where jurors have received favors from interested parties, does not prevent counsel from performing a mere act of humanity for a juror,⁵⁸ and the verdict is not vitiated because counsel at a juror's request sends for medicine to relieve the juror from suffering.⁵⁹ The fact that counsel, during a period when the jury are back in court to receive further instructions, asks the court to inquire how the jury stands, to which one of the jurors gives answer, has been held not to require a vacation of the verdict.⁶⁰

On the other hand, it is misconduct which will vitiate the verdict for a juror, during the progress of the trial, to go to the home of, and accept free room and board from, a person who is unfriendly to the losing party, and under obligations to the successful party, and accompanied by the attorney for the latter,⁶¹ or to accept a room and board from an interested attorney,⁶² or for the attorney of one of the parties to treat⁶³ or entertain⁶⁴ the jury at the suggestion of some of the jurors,⁶⁵ or for an

Denial of mistrial for alleged mingling and conversation with jurors by investigator for plaintiff's attorney was not error, where investigator denied conversation.—Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Benson, 186 N.E. 244, 352 Ill. 195, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 53, 290 U.S. 636, 78 L.Ed. 553.

Attorney not connected with case on trial

Conversation between a juror and a young attorney who had his desk in the office of the counsel for one of the parties but was in no way associated with him or interested in the case does not constitute misconduct which would warrant setting aside of the verdict.—Cohn v. Cincinnati Traction Co., 26 Ohio Cir.Ct. N.S., 267.

Letters

Where juror who had written improper letter to counsel for defendant participated in deliberations and agreed to verdict for plaintiff, verdict could not be permitted to stand.—City of San Antonio v. McKenzie Const. Co., 150 S.W.2d 989, 136 Tex. 315.

Prevention by court of improper communications

Association or conversation between attorney and friend of juror

Refusal to discharge jury because at noon recess during trial a friend of one of the jurors asked plaintiff's counsel for his card, which he gave him, was not abuse of discretion.—Davis v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 233 S.W.2d 679, 361 Mo. 61.

Association or conversation held not misconduct

(1) Exchange of bantering remarks between juror and attorney in corridor adjoining court room during progress of trial when juror stated that attorney resembled a certain motion picture actor was not basis for mistrial on ground of "misconduct".—Happoldt v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America, 203 P.2d 55, 90 Cal.App.2d 386.

(2) Defendant's counsel was not guilty of misconduct in treating jury to lunch in absence of showing that jury knew who paid for the lunch on the day they were taken to view the premises.—Hubbard v. Cleveland, Columbus & Cincinnati Highway, 76 N.E.2d 721, 81 Ohio App. 445.

Invitation by attorney's wife

An invitation to juror by wife of one of defendant's attorneys to spend the night at such attorney's home, juror's tentative acceptance of such invitation before rendition of verdict, and his unconditional acceptance thereof after return of the verdict, constituted sufficient ground to direct mistrial or set aside verdict had matter been promptly called to attention of trial court.—Legg v. investigator or other person engaged in prosecuting a case to mingle with and have a conversation with a juror.⁶⁶ It has also been held that the transportation of a juror between his home and the place of the trial by a party's attorney is improper.⁶⁷

Conduct meriting punishment. For jurors, on their discovering they are under the surveillance of a detective for one of the parties, to invite the detective into a saloon to drink intoxicating liquor with them, and talk about the case, is highly improper conduct meriting suitable punishment.⁶⁸

d. Witnesses

The mingling by jurors in intimate social contact with prominent witnesses on whose testimony the case is to be determined is not commended, and jurors should not converse with witnesses during the course of the trial.

Jurors should not converse with witnesses during the course of the trial,⁶⁹ and the mingling by jurors in intimate social contact with prominent witnesses on whose testimony the case is to be determined is not commended;⁷⁰ but whether a mistrial should be declared because of such conduct is within the discretion of the court.⁷¹ While the test of the necessity for a mistrial is whether the acts of the juror and the witness might have influenced the juror's mind or had any tendency to influence it,⁷² and actual influence of a juror is excluded as a test,⁷³ the actual influence may be inquired into.⁷⁴

hearing of the jury, while they are out inspecting the property in controversy under order of the court, the verdict will be set aside.⁷⁵ If harmless, a conversation between a juror and witness pending the trial will not cause the verdict to be disturbed,⁷⁶ even though it relates to the case.⁷⁷ A heated argument between witnesses about the case does not vitiate the verdict if the argument was not heard by the jury.⁷⁸ The fact that a juror cross-examines a witness does not show such a manifestation of prejudice as will vitiate the verdict,⁷⁹ and there is no error where a juror, in order to assist the court and counsel in reassuring a dull and unresponsive witness for the purpose of obtaining proper answers to questions, says to the witness, "Say, 'Yes' or 'No.' We will stand by you if he wants to lick you or anything."⁸⁰ Where during cross-examination of a witness a juror exclaimed, "That is immaterial and irrelevant," but the judge, the opposing counsel, and the other jurors did not hear him and the judge offered to instruct that it was improper for a juror to talk to a witness, refusal to grant a mistrial was proper.⁸¹

e. Other Jurors

It has been said to be improper for jurors to discuss the case between themselves prior to its submission to them. The fact that some jurors treated some of their friends on the jury is not misconduct if one of the parties is not connected with such act.

Discretion held not abused

(1) In action on automobile fire policy, refusing to declare mistrial because of conversation between juror and witness relating to previous trials was not abuse of discretion.—Rent-A-Car Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co., 163 A. 702, 163 Md. 401, 86 A.L.R. 922.

(2) Refusal to order mistrial for defense witness' act of riding home with juror at juror's invitation after court adjourned was not abuse of discretion.—Rioux v. Portland Water Dist., 170 A. 63, 132 Me. 307.

submission to them⁸² or when they are not functioning as a jury.⁸³ However, a comment by one juror to another as to what evidence that was being introduced indicated to him,⁸⁴ and a conversation between jurors, during recess, with respect to a map which had been admitted in evidence,⁸⁵ have been held not fatal to the verdict. The fact that some of the jurors treated some of their friends on the jury is not misconduct if one of the parties is not connected with such act.⁸⁶

1. Officers

Contacts between court officers and jurors, except as authorized by the court in appropriate circumstances, are not to be countenanced.

Contacts between court officers and jurors, except as authorized by the court in appropriate circumstances, are not to be countenanced since no justification should be given for arousing suspicions as to the sanctity of jury verdicts.⁸⁷ Although under some statutes no sheriff or other officer may converse with the jury, or a member of the jury, after they have been sworn,⁸⁸ it is not misconduct if the conversation is on subjects which are entirely unrelated to the case on trial.⁸⁹ It has also been said that officers having a jury in charge while they are deliberating on their verdict should never speak to them except to ask them whether they have agreed;⁹⁰ and the verdict will be vitiated where the officer suggests matters to the jury which will alarm or frighten them into agreement,⁹¹ or remains with the jury while deliberating, talks with them about the case, and threatens to fine one juror who declines to vote without further consideration.⁹² It is entirely proper for the foreman to consult with the officer in charge as to the possibility of obtaining further information with respect to a point on which the jury are not clear⁹³ or to suggest to the officer that the jurors desire to obtain further instruction from the court.⁹⁴ While improper, it is not prejudicial error that the officer in charge tells the jury that a verdict could be agreed to by five-sixths of the jury.⁹⁵ Although not fatal to the verdict if not prejudicial,⁹⁶ it is reprehensible and punishable misconduct for the jury, during the deliberations, to send the officer in charge to take the measurements of an object materially involved in the case⁹⁷ or to send him after books and papers involved in the case without the knowledge of court or counsel.⁹⁸

Request for picture held not misconduct

Where one of jurors on way to jury room commented on absence of pictures to deputy sheriff, and juror's request for picture was disposed of in open court and in presence of both counsel by sending picture to the jury room by the deputy sheriff, there was no improper communication with the jury on the part of the deputy sheriff.—Baumhoer v. McLaughlin, Mo.App., 205 S.W.2d 274.

g. Presence of Others in Jury Room

It is error to permit a person not a member of the jury to be present in the jury room during their deliberations.

Not only is it error to permit a person not a member of the jury to be present in the jury room during their deliberations,⁹⁹ but it is improper conduct for the judge himself to enter the jury room while the jury are deliberating;¹ and, according to some cases, this is of itself sufficient to vitiate the verdict,² although there is also some authority to the contrary.³ While it is improper for the officer in charge of the jury to remain in the jury room while they are deliberating on their verdict,⁴ it has often been held that the mere presence of a court officer during the deliberations of the jury is not ground for setting the verdict aside if he does not interfere with, or influence, them.⁵

h. Newspaper Reports or Comments on Case

Although newspapers have no right to attempt to influence the trial, the mere fact that a newspaper report of the trial has been published is not ground for discharging a jury when it is not shown that any of them have read the article.

Although it has been said that jurors should not, during the course of the trial, be permitted to read newspapers containing comments on the issues in the case on trial,⁶ and newspapers have no more right than any other person to attempt to influence the decision of the jury,⁷ it is usually held that the fact that jurors have read newspaper accounts or comments, which are not of a highly damaging character or inspired by a party to the suit, does not of itself vitiate the verdict,⁸ nor is it such misconduct as to require the trial court to withdraw or discharge the jurors from the case,⁹ it being largely within the discretion of the court whether or not the jurors will be withdrawn or discharged.¹⁰ The mere fact that a newspaper report of the trial has been published is not ground for discharging the jury when it is not shown that any of them have read the article,¹¹ especially where the counsel for the complaining party was afforded and declined the opportunity before the verdict to ascertain whether any jurors had read the article or were influenced thereby.¹²

It is, however, vitiating misconduct for jurors to take into the jury room, and give consideration to, a newspaper account of a previous trial designed to be prejudicial and showing that defendant carries liability insurance.¹³ Whether or not the jury shall be warned against reading newspaper reports

Where party to an action walked through jury room, before case was given to jury, but while jury was discussing case, in order to reach a toilet, and on coming back through jury room stopped and lit a cigarette, the inadvertent acts of the party were improper but did not vitiate the verdict.—*Shew v. Reference to insurance in newspaper article

(1) The publication of newspaper articles stating that defendant sued for injuries sustained in automobile collision was insured, did not require withdrawal of case from jury, where some of jurors stated that they had not read articles, and jurors who had read articles stated that they would not be influenced thereby, and defendant testified that he was insured and requested instruction that jury must determine rights and liability of parties without regard to insurance.—Kelley v. Dickerson, 13 N.E.2d 535, 213 Ind. 624.

or comments¹⁴ or whether or not inquiry shall be made of the jury to determine whether they have read a newspaper comment on the trial¹⁵ rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. When newspaper comments or reports favorable to one party are published during the progress of the trial it is clearly proper for the trial judge to call the attention of the jury thereto, express his unqualified disapprobation of such conduct, and caution the jury not to be influenced by the publication in question.¹⁶

§ 458. Obtaining Evidence or Knowledge by Unauthorized Means

It is improper for the jury to make a private search for evidence which, although competent and not subject to being explained or rebutted by the parties, may put the jurors in possession of facts which will have a potential influence on their verdict.

Since the jury must base their verdict on evidence legally introduced on the trial of the cause, as discussed infra § 462, it is improper conduct for them to make a private search for evidence which, although incompetent and not subject to being explained or rebutted by the parties, may put the jurors in possession of facts which will have a potential influence on their verdict.¹⁷ It is also improper for any juror to communicate to his fellow jurors anything which he may know from information obtained otherwise than through the medium of the trial.¹⁸

§ 459. — Unauthorized View or Inspection

An unauthorized view or inspection of a scene or object involved in the case by the jurors constitutes misconduct and will vitiate the verdict where it clearly appears, or is reasonably to be inferred, or there is reasonable probability that the verdict was influenced by the unauthorized view or inspection.

While the court may, in its discretion, allow the jury to view or inspect a scene or object involved in the case, as discussed supra § 47, an unauthorized view or inspection of the locus in quo by the jurors constitutes misconduct,¹⁹ and according to many cases an unauthorized view or inspection by the jury will vitiate the verdict where it clearly appears,²⁰ or it is reasonably to be inferred,²¹ or there is a reasonable probability that,²² the verdict was influenced by the unauthorized view or inspection. Especially is the verdict vitiated where the view or examination is made, by preconcerted arrangement, in company with the friends and witnesses of the successful party without the knowledge or presence of the defeated party or his counsel.²³

Although it has been stated broadly that misconduct in taking an unauthorized view or inspection will, because it has a tendency to corrupt and cast suspicion on the pure and sound administration of justice, cause the verdict to be set aside without regard to whether the misconduct has resulted in prejudice,²⁴ it has been held that the verdict will not be set aside because of an unauthorized view or inspection where it can be preserved,²⁵ or it is reasonably clear²⁶ that the verdict was not improperly influenced; and some decisions contain statements which go even further and require an affirmative showing of prejudice before the verdict will be vitiated.²⁷ It has also been held that an unauthorized view by jurors constitutes misconduct, only as to that element of the verdict affected thereby.²⁸ The refusal to declare a mistrial is not error

Facts held not to constitute misconduct

In action for damages sustained in automobile collision, a juror's visit to scene of accident during trial did not constitute jury misconduct, in absence of showing that on such occasion he saw anything which he had not seen many times before his acceptance as juror.—Akers v. Epperson, Tex.Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 512, certified question answered 171 S.W.2d 483, 141 Tex. 189, 156 A.L.R. 1028.

where there is no proof that the juror made an unauthorized inspection.²⁹

Where an unauthorized view is taken by several jurors in good faith, and without seriously prejudicing the rights of the complaining party, the irregularity may be cured by an instruction directing the jury to disregard any facts learned by the view.³⁰ However, the irregularity is not cured by a direction of the court to have the entire jury make a view.³¹ When the court is not in session jurors should not be permitted to examine exhibits.³²

Things not directly involved in cause. In order for the verdict to be vitiated the inspection need not necessarily be of something directly involved in the case, but it may be of some other place or thing supposed to possess features similar to those of the place or thing involved in the cause, so that the inspection or experiment is likely to result in the formation of an opinion as to something directly involved.³³

§ 460. Other Misconduct of Jurors

- a. In general
- b. Premature formation and expression of opinion
- c. Use of refreshments and intoxicating liquors
- d. Disclosure of contents of sealed verdict
- e. Requesting voluntary action of successful party

a. In General

Various remarks of jurors during the trial have been held to vitiate the verdict or not to vitiate the verdict.

It has been held not to be such prejudicial misconduct as will vitiate the verdict for a juror to express a desire to view the premises involved;³⁴ to remark that he does not think counsel for one of the parties will let him sit in the case;³⁵ to ask, on the way to the jury box, to see the injured hand of plaintiff which had previously been exhibited to the jury and the injury testified to;³⁶ to joke about injured plaintiff in a personal injury action;³⁷ to ask why defendant failed to complete work where admittedly the conditions at the place of injury resulted from the work being done;³⁸ to comment on the evidence where the court instructs the jurors not to make comments on the evidence and to disregard the comment made;³⁹ to answer in reply to questions of an attorney during his argument that they had observed the conduct and demeanor of a witness while testifying;⁴⁰ to state, during cross-examination of defendant's witness, in tones audible to court and jury, that he believes that defendant is trying to signal the witness what to answer;⁴¹ or to ask the judge, not in the presence or hearing of any other person, whether counsel had a right to cross-examine the witness as he had, stating that it appeared to him that counsel was attempting to trap the witness and that it seemed like persecution.⁴²

On the other hand, where the court did not rebuke the juror or caution the jury not to be prejudiced, it was held to be fatal to the verdict that a juror made a semiaudible remark "That's right," where plaintiff's counsel stated that defendant's counsel had made plaintiff's youthful witnesses cry during cross-examination by trying to make them lie.⁴³ While it is highly improper for a juror, during the examination of a witness, to give audible voice to his conclusion that the witness is lying,⁴⁴ the verdict will not be disturbed if it is not shown that the other jurors heard the exclamation and were influenced thereby.⁴⁵ It is improper for one of the jurors to place before the jury the fact that insurance is involved whatever the source of the information may have been,⁴⁶ and a statement by a juror which refers to the fact that defendant is insured is ground for the withdrawal or discharge of the jurors.⁴⁷ However, it is not error where the subject of insurance had been introduced on cross-examination by the complaining party, and the facts placed before the jury were to his advantage.⁴⁸ Whether a mistrial should be granted because of a remark by a juror is within the discretion of the court.⁴⁹

It is the duty of jurors not to form or express their opinion as to the merits of the cause until arguments have been had, instructions given, and the case finally submitted to them.

It is the duty of jurors not to form or express their opinion as to the merits of the cause until arguments have been had, instructions given, and the case finally submitted to them,⁵⁰ and where a juror expresses an opinion before the case is submitted the court should, of its own motion, discharge the juror.⁵¹ Should a juror, while he is separated from the rest, during the course of the trial, talk to others and declare his already formed opinion as to the merits of the controversy, such prejudgment by the juror vitiates the verdict.⁵² If the court has reason to believe that the jurors have expressed a determination to render a verdict in favor of one of the parties, irrespective of the facts proved, it may, before the parties have challenged them, admonish them as to their duty to decide the case fairly and impartially on the evidence.⁵³

It is not misconduct for the jury to send out for refreshments during their deliberations, and, while the drinking of intoxicating liquors is reprehensible misconduct, it is generally held not to vitiate the verdict where the drinking is not at the expense of one of the parties and the jurors are not incapacitated from performing their duties as such.

It is not misconduct for the jury to send out for refreshments during their deliberations,⁵⁴ or to drink cider belonging to plaintiff which is furnished them in response to such a request where the cider was furnished without knowledge of plaintiff and the jury did not know it belonged to him.⁵⁵ While it is reprehensible misconduct,⁵⁶ even the drinking of intoxicating liquors is generally held not to vitiate the verdict where the drinking is not at the expense of one of the parties and the jurors are not incapacitated from performing their duties as such.⁵⁷ On the other hand, if the drinking is at the expense of the successful party,⁵⁸ or a juror thereby becomes so intoxicated as to be incapable of properly performing his duties,⁵⁹ it will vitiate the verdict. It has been held that it is error to permit a juror to use intoxicating liquors unless it is done with the permission of the court, on the prescription of a practicing physician.⁶⁰

d. Disclosure of Contents of Sealed Verdict

The disclosure of the nature of a verdict which has been agreed on but not announced or received in court will not of itself vitiate the verdict where there was no fraudulent or improper motive in making the disclosure and the losing party was not injured thereby.

While it is reprehensible conduct for a juror to disclose the nature of a verdict which has been agreed on but not announced or received in court,⁶¹ this will not of itself vitiate the verdict where there was no fraudulent or improper motive in making the

Where a juror made a disparaging remark concerning the race to which the juror and counsel for plaintiff belonged, but trial court found that no reference had been made to the race on trial or to any person concerned therein and that nothing occurred during the trial to indicate any prejudice or bias against either counsel or litigant, denial of plaintiff's motion for a mistrial and a motion to set aside verdict was not an abuse of discretion.—*Bluett v. e. Requesting Voluntary Action of Successful Party

It is not improper for jurors to ask, in connection with their verdict, that the successful party recognize a moral obligation to his opponent.

The fact that jurors in connection with their verdict in favor of defendant file a letter or request asking defendant to recognize a moral obligation to pay plaintiff,⁶³ or to assist plaintiff's family,⁶⁴ is not misconduct which affects the validity of the verdict.

§ 461. Method of Determining Jurors' Conduct

The method of determining jurors' conduct rests in the discretion of the court.

C. DELIBERATIONS AND MANNER OF ARRIVING AT VERDICT

§ 462. In General

- General considerations
- Duty to agree and heed arguments of other jurors
- Length of deliberation and necessity for retirement
- Food and rest during deliberations
- Discussion and consideration of evidence and issues submitted by instructions
- Discussion and consideration of matters not in evidence or issue generally

In determining a motion for a mistrial for the alleged misconduct of jurors, the court has discretion to decide how the jurors should be examined.⁶⁵ It is within the discretionary power of the court to examine a juror who, an attorney asserts, is guilty of possible misconduct,⁶⁶ and to refuse to permit the attorney for the person suspected of interference with the jurors to participate in the inquiry into the misconduct.⁶⁷ In order to determine whether there has been any prejudicial misconduct on the part of jurors the trial judge may make, from the bench, direct inquiry of the jury on this point without having the jury retire to the jury room to determine whether there has been any prejudicial misconduct,⁶⁸ although it is not error to have the jury make such an inquiry in the jury room.⁶⁹

g. Misrepresentations by jurors

a. General Considerations

The verdict of the jury should be the result of the exercise of judgment, reflection, and conscientious conviction applied to the evidence in the case, and the jury should be fair and impartial to all parties during deliberations.

Generally, the deliberations and arrival at the verdict should be a process of determining the material facts from the evidence which has been introduced,⁷⁰ and applying the law to such facts as

Jury as trier of facts

(1) Jury has duty to consider all facts and circumstances in evidence, meanwhile weighing preponderances, drawing inferences, balancing hypotheses and comparing delinquencies in light of their experiences as reasonable and honorable men.—Tombigbee Mill & Lumber Co. v. Hollingsworth, C.C.A.Miss., 162 F.2d 763, certiorari denied 68 S.Ct. 165, 332 U.S. 824, 92 L.Ed. 399.

(2) In action involving collision occurring when truck overtook and passed plaintiff's automobile and struck oncoming automobile which collided with plaintiff's, jury, in determining whether he exercised ordinary care, was bound to consider distance and speeds of vehicles and legal duty not to cut in front of plaintiff's automobile within thirty feet and to be on driver's own side of

instructed by the court;⁷¹ and every verdict should be the result of the exercise of judgment, reflection, and conscientious conviction on the part of the jury.⁷² The jurors must observe the rights of both parties and be indifferent and impartial,⁷³ and immune from extraneous influence.⁷⁴ The jury are bound to accept and apply the principles of law governing the case before them, and they are not authorized to depart from these principles simply because they judge it necessary to accomplish justice in the particular case.⁷⁵ A verdict is invalid if it is arrived at by merely making a mathematical calculation rather than exercising judgment and weighing and considering the evidence,⁷⁶ or if it is based on some theory evolved by the jurors themselves and not supported by any evidence.⁷⁷ The jury should not be required to enter into their deliberations under circumstances calculated to prevent a full and fair consideration of the matters committed to their decision;⁷⁸ and it is the duty of the trial court to see that their deliberations are not deflected by outside considerations.⁷⁹ As a general rule the deliberations of the jury are secret and the court will make no inquiry into the nature or extent of such deliberations.⁸⁰

b. Duty to Agree and Heed Arguments of Other Jurors

Generally, jurors should give due consideration to the opinions of each other in order to reach a harmonious result under the law and evidence in the case.

A jury should examine a question submitted to them with due regard to the opinions of each other, and should try to reach a harmonious result if they can do so, under the law and evidence in the case;⁸¹ but this does not mean that jurors should agree to a verdict which is against their honest convictions,⁸² or that they shall compromise, divide, highway before reaching oncoming automobile.—Bobat v. Hoxie Truck Line, 267 N.W. 673, 221 Iowa 823.

(3) Juries should be afforded by courts every reasonable opportunity for properly performing their functions.—Hand v. Hill, 6 N.Y.S.2d 838, 187 Misc. 583, affirmed 8 N.Y.S.2d 564, 255 App.Div. 1016.

Conduct of witness

In determining whether driver was guilty of gross negligence so as to authorize recovery by guest in automobile, jury were not required to pass separately on the various elements which entered into driver's conduct but they could view his conduct as a whole.—Bruno v. Donahue, 24 N.E.2d 761, 305 Mass. 30.—Smith v. Axtman, 6 N.E.2d 809, 288 Mass. 512.

Misconduct during deliberations

In determining whether alleged misconduct occurred in the course of jury's deliberations and the effect of such misconduct, if established, court must consider the elements prescribed in rule of civil procedure authorizing a new trial on ground of misconduct.—Burkett v. Slauson, Civ. App., 235 S.W.2d 505, reversed on other grounds 237 S.W.2d 253, 150 Tex. 69.

Appraising damage

A jury must not appraise any damage suffered by plaintiff prior to finding whether defendant is liable on the evidence.—Newman v. Los Angeles Transit Lines, 262 P.2d 95, 120 Cal.App.2d 685.

All jurors to participate

A litigant whose cause has been submitted to a jury is entitled to have his cause considered and discussed by all the jurors, and is entitled to have all of them participate in the decision of every question presented.—Ralston v. Stump, 62 N.E.2d 293, 75 Ohio App. 375.

Favorable attitude

Compelling agreement

Juror cannot be compelled to agree one way or the other.—In re Stern, 95 A.2d 593, 11 N.J. 584.

Reasonable concessions to opinions of fellow jurors

Jury should not go contrary to their convictions but they should or yield for mere purpose of an agreement.⁸³ The verdict should not be a general average of views of individual jurors but a consensus of individual judgment.⁸⁴ The views expressed by a majority of the jury, whether that majority be large or small, are entitled to careful consideration by the minority;⁸⁵ but the mere fact, standing by itself, that a majority is a majority, should never lead a minority to abandon views honestly entertained on the evidence and the law.⁸⁶

c. Length of Deliberation and Necessity for Retirement

Generally, where the law does not positively prescribe the length of time a jury shall consider their verdict, they may do so within a very short time after retirement or in some cases without retiring at all.

While the verdict should be the result of sound judgment, dispassionate consideration, and conscientious reflection,⁸⁷ and the jury should, if necessary, deliberate patiently and long on the issues which have been submitted to them,⁸⁸ where the law does not positively prescribe the length of time a jury shall consider their verdict, they may render a valid verdict without retiring,⁸⁹ or on very brief deliberation after retiring,⁹⁰ especially where the evidence is not complicated,⁹¹ or the facts are clearly drawn.⁹² The trial court may, in its discretion, cause the jury to reconsider the case if their decision is so hasty as to indicate a flippant disregard of their duties.⁹³

If the jury report a disagreement, the judge may keep them together for further deliberation for a reasonable length of time and until he is satisfied that they have made an honest effort to agree.⁹⁴ How long the jury should be kept together, or what is a reasonable length of time, depends on the circumstances of each case,⁹⁵ and, unless there is some express statutory limitation,⁹⁶ may be determined by the trial court in the exercise of a sound discretion,⁹⁷ which will be interfered with only where there has been a clear abuse of discretion and the jury coerced.⁹⁸ In weighing the circumstances to determine what consideration caused a particular jury to come to a prompt decision after a further instruction by the trial judge, such appraisal proceeds according to reasonable probability.⁹⁹

d. Food and Rest during Deliberations

Where necessary to the particular case, the judge may properly see that the jurors receive food and lodgings, especially where so provided by statute.

Where the jury are confined in deliberations for a considerable length of time, the judge may proper-properly give heed to opinions of their fellow jurors and by reasonable concessions reach a conclusion which, although not originally entertained by any of them, nevertheless may be one to which all can scrupulously adhere.—High v. Lenow, 258 S.W.2d 742, 195 Tenn. 158.

that defendant was not negligent, or that pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence.—O'Connell v. Ford, supra.

ly see that they have an opportunity to sleep in comfortable and healthy surroundings,¹ and see that they have meals furnished seasonably and amply to their satisfaction;² and the court may, when necessary, direct the furnishing of food, lodging, and transportation regardless of any statutory authority.³ A statute providing that jurors shall not be required to continue their deliberations, without sleep and rest, beyond a specified hour, and at that hour or earlier they shall, under such safeguards as the court directs, be afforded suitable opportunity for sleep and rest for at least eight hours before again taking up their deliberations, requires more than the mere presence of beds in the jury room.⁴ Under such a statute it is the duty of the court to inform the jurors of their statutory rights with respect to sleep and rest, since, unless such rights are understood, the jurors do not receive the benefit of the statute.⁵

e. Discussion and Consideration of Evidence and Issues Submitted by Instructions

dence in the case and its meaning, including evidence admitted under rulings of the court although it relates to matters not pleaded.

The jury may properly hold discussions or arguments as to all questions directly involved,⁶ and as to the evidence,⁷ or what it tends to show;⁸ and it is not misconduct for a juror to go further and fortify his opinion as to the evidence by arguing and showing that he has a special ability to judge such matters.⁹ It is not misconduct, in itself, that the jury's finding was based on illogical reasons or that erroneous conclusions were drawn from the evidence,¹⁰ since in the absence of overt acts of misconduct it is not permissible to probe the minds of jurors or supervise their process of reasoning.¹¹ The jury's consideration may¹² and should¹³ extend to all evidence which has been introduced on a point rather than confined to only a portion thereof. Evidence which has been admitted under rulings of the court may be considered although it re-

Failure to use accommodations

Where jury were told to cease deliberations before midnight, and jury did not again take up consideration of cases until more than eight hours later, and jury knew that sleeping accommodations were available to them, statute providing that jurors shall not be required to continue deliberations without sleep and rest later than midnight was complied with, and violation of statute was not shown by evidence that some jurors chose not to use accommodations provided but to engage in noisy play. —Caldwell v. Yeatman, 15 A.2d 252, 81 N.H. 150.

Time of informing jury

The statute requiring the court to provide lodging for jurors at midnight or earlier imposes a mandatory duty on the court to provide lodging at or before midnight but does not require the court to advise the jury of that fact at any particular time during its deliberations, since it is discretionary with the court whether the jury should be so informed and when such instruction should be given.—Dunne v. Carey, 79 A.2d 842, 37 N.H. 43.

Pleadings and evidence

In automobile accident case, in determining whose negligence and what negligence proximately caused alleged injury, jury may consider allegations in petition of defendant's negligence supported by evidence, and such inferences of negligence as may be drawn from pleadings sustained by evidence against plaintiff, together with provisions of statute requiring vehicles to operate at a reasonable and safe speed.—Southern Stages v. Clements, 30 S.E.2d 429, 71 Ga.App. 169.

All evidence in case

Generally the jury is to determine the issues from all the evidence in the case, not that produced and offered exclusively by one side or the other, but from the testimony of all witnesses, the depositions, and any other items of evidence admitted at the trial.—Friedrich v. Nolan, 78 N.E.2d 59, 81 Ohio App. 282.

lates to matters not pleaded by the parties.¹⁴ Where there is a conflict in the evidence, it is the jury's duty to reconcile it, if possible,¹⁵ but if impossible, they may give credit to that which they think most reliable and most entitled to belief under the circumstances disclosed,¹⁶ and give their decision for the party in whose favor the evidence preponderates.¹⁷ The jury may also consider during their deliberations what occurred and what appeared from their observation as well as testimony given orally;¹⁸ and when the true meaning of an expression used by a witness is plainly apparent from the context and the connection in which it was made, or from other pertinent circumstances which show that the words were ignorantly or improperly used and do not convey the meaning actually intended, the jury are authorized to ascribe to the words the meaning which the surroundings indicate and which the witness evidently intended them to have.¹⁹

f. Discussion and Consideration of Matters Not in Evidence or Issue Generally

Jurors are allowed some latitude in their deliberations in their efforts and methods adopted in arriving at a verdict, and they may discuss matters which have no basis in evidence or relevancy to a point in issue where nonprejudicial; but it is misconduct, generally, for jurors to discuss matters expressly excluded by the trial court.

While the jury should consider only the evidence and the matters which have been submitted to them by the instructions of the court,²⁰ illustrations and discussions of the jurors in weighing the testimony may take a fairly wide range,²¹ and, if they are nonprejudicial, discussions of matters which have no basis in the evidence, or relevancy to a point in issue, are not ground for reversal.²² If no overt act occurs, it is not misconduct requiring a reversal that a juror of his own accord and by his own secret process of reasoning takes into consideration an improper matter,²³ and is thus led to agree to a verdict different from that which he would otherwise have agreed to,²⁴ since the courts cannot

Failure to instruct

Where jury was not instructed to disregard evidence as to damages in excess of those pleaded, jury could properly consider such evidence without an amendment of the pleadings.—Sward v. Nash, 40 N.W.2d 828, 230 Minn. 100.

64 C.J. p 1020 note 44.

Credibility of witnesses

Jurors must pass on credibility of witnesses and weight to be given their testimony, and in discussing such matters during deliberations jurors are exercising their proper prerogative.—Scoggins v. Curtiss & Taylor, Civ.App., 219 S.W.2d 446, reversed on other grounds 219 S.W.2d 451, 148 Tex. 15.

Self-interest of party

Where testimony that driver of family purpose automobile did not have permission to use it is not disputed by other parol testimony, jury may test credibility of witnesses by their self-interest and weigh that testimony against facts from which permission to drive may be inferred.—

Prejudicial as to damage issue only

In personal injury action arising out of motor vehicle accident, where there was no evidence on question of whether plaintiff's employer would fire plaintiff after trial, tendered evidence thereon having been excluded, conduct of jurors in discussing question in jury room while considering case was improper, but such conduct was prejudicial only on damage issue and not on liability issue submitted.—East Tex. Motor Freight Lines v. Sterrett, Tex.Civ.App., 240 S.W.2d 352.

Negroes as unworthy of belief

Jurors' expression of belief in discussion that negroes as class were unworthy of belief could not be treated as misconduct, even though most of defendant's witnesses were negroes, since credibility was a question for jury.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Burns, Tex.Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 801.

23. Tex.—Molter v. Madden, Civ. App., 207 S.W.2d 984.—Texas & P. R. Co. v. Aaron, Civ.App., 19 S.W.2d 930, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 409, 281 U.S. 756, 74 L.Ed. 1166.

Defendant's absence during argument

Testimony of juror that he and other jurors thought that defendant's absence during argument was due to lack of interest in his case, and so believing they rendered verdict against him, was insufficient to reflect misconduct where defendant did not allege any overt act in such respect.—Molter v. Madden, Tex.Civ. App., 207 S.W.2d 984.

Establishing misconduct

In order to establish misconduct of a juror, there must be more to base it on than mere undisclosed thoughts and impressions of jurors, but some overt act of one or more of the jurors of sufficient importance must be set up and proved before verdict can be set aside on this ground.—Molter v. Madden, supra.

undertake to probe into or supervise the jurors' process of reasoning during their deliberations.²⁵

The verdict will be vitiated, however, if the jury discuss and consider as a basis for their findings of fact something which is not legally admitted evidence,²⁶ or if they have let their verdict be influenced by the discussion and consideration of improper matters not in issue and which cannot legally have any effect on the rights of the parties.²⁷ Thus, it has been held misconduct requiring the verdict to be set aside that the jury discussed and based their finding on a statement made by counsel in his argument;²⁸ that a juror, without making such disclosure to the trial court, disclosed to his fellows during their deliberations the fact that one of the parties had attempted improperly to influence him, and the jury attempted to impose a punishment

by rendering verdict against the party who made the attempt;²⁹ that jurors were influenced by the argument of one of their members that a verdict for plaintiff would be futile as defendant would appeal and obtain a reversal;³⁰ that the jury refused recovery to a mother for loss of services of her minor son because one of their members, during deliberations, called attention to the fact that the son had already recovered a judgment in his own right for the same injuries;³¹ that there was a discussion of pensions where the matter of pensions was not in evidence;³² or that there was a discussion of the effect of income taxes on the verdict.³³

It is likewise misconduct to discuss and consider the question of attorney's fees,³⁴ or the fact that plaintiff would have to pay attorney's fees from any recovery he might be allowed,³⁵ or the fact

Prejudicial to one of parties

Reading by juror of a document not properly introduced in evidence is ground for mistrial if there is sufficient ground to believe that one of the parties has been prejudiced thereby.—Hinton v. Gallagher, 57 S.E.2d 131, 190 Va. 421.

Expressly excluded matter

Jury may not discuss testimony expressly excluded by court, and juror's statement to other jurors as to contents of telephone directory advertisement, which had been excluded from evidence, was misconduct.—Wood v. Stokes, Tex.Civ.App., 219 S.W.2d 545, error dismissed.

Extent of consideration as determining misconduct

(1) Juror's suggestion that it was improper to discuss that percentage of damages awarded would go to plaintiff's attorney as contingent fee did not remedy misconduct of jury in discussing the matter at some length.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Mix, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 542.

(2) Statement of one of jurors to others that plaintiff would have to pay attorney's fees was not misconduct where juror was immediately admonished that jury should not discuss such matters and no further reference was made thereto, in absence of showing that verdict was influenced thereby.—International Great Northern R. Co. v. Hawthorne, Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 895, affirmed 116 S.W.2d 1056, 131 Tex. 622, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 487, 306 U.S. 639, 83 L.Ed. 1040.

that defendant was protected against liability by indemnity insurance.³⁶ It is not misconduct, however, for the jurors to discuss attorney's fees³⁷ or liability insurance,³⁸ where the trial court could find that such happenings, if true, occurred after the jury had decided on their verdict. Also it is not misconduct for a juror to request that the way of voting be kept a secret as he has friends on both sides of the case.³⁹

It is misconduct for a juror to influence improperly another juror during deliberations by misrepresentations.

It is ground for setting the verdict aside that some of the jurors have been improperly influenced in rendering their verdict by the misrepresentations of another juror,⁴⁰ even though such misrepresentations are innocently made.⁴¹

§ 463. Discussion and Consideration of Personal Experiences or Knowledge as to Material Matters

- a. In general
- b. General knowledge on matters of common knowledge

a. In General

Jurors are required to base their conclusions entirely on evidence produced during the trial and they must not permit their findings to be influenced by any facts known to them personally.

Although it has been said that the ancient doctrine permitted the jurors to render their verdict on facts within their personal knowledge as well as those derived from the testimony of witnesses,⁴² it is now well settled, as a general rule, that a verdict cannot be based on facts in the private knowledge of jurors but must be based solely on evidence regularly produced on trial,⁴³ which they cannot disregard in deference to their own independent opinions or conclusions as to matters requiring proof.⁴⁴ If a juror knows any particular fact ma-

Facts constituting misconduct

(1) Undisputed testimony of jurors that they discussed and considered fact that defendant was or was not protected by insurance constituted misconduct as a matter of law because they went beyond the record and discussed a matter that was not in evidence and which was irrelevant to any issues submitted to them and one that was calculated to cause injury.—Gillespie v. Rossi, Tex.Civ.App., 238 S.W.2d 547, error refused no reversible error.

(2) Contention that there was no misconduct from jurors' discussion of fact that statute required defendant in automobile accident case to carry liability insurance could not be sustained where evidence showed defendant was not carrier for hire.—Gaines v. Stewart, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 207.

Facts not constituting misconduct

(1) Litigant cannot be passed out of court merely because of juror's casual mention of insurance carried by one of parties in the case.—Yellow Cab Co. of Galveston v. Word, Tex.Civ.App., 125 S.W.2d 1050.

terial to the case, it is his duty to be sworn as a witness in open court and be publicly examined,⁴⁵ so that the testimony may go to his brethren under the sanction of an oath,⁴⁶ it may first be scrutinized as to its competency and relevancy,⁴⁷ it may be subjected to cross-examination and contradiction or explanation,⁴⁸ and in order that court and counsel may be informed of the evidence on which the jury are to act.⁴⁹ The fact that a juror or jurors have considered or discussed their personal knowledge as to material matters is improper⁵⁰ and constitutes misconduct⁵¹ which is generally fatal to the validity of the verdict.⁵² On the other hand it has been held that in order to be ground for reversal it must appear that the statements of a juror were of positive facts asserted to be within his knowledge rather than a mere expression of opinion;⁵³ that misconduct of a juror in stating matters of his own personal knowledge will not operate to reverse if the verdict was correct;⁵⁴ and that, since the jurors must act to some degree on their own knowledge of the parties and the witnesses, it is not ground for reversal that a juror states things which he has heard that seriously affect the credibility of a witness.⁵⁵ Also, in order to be prejudicial misconduct it must relate and affect a material issue in the case.⁵⁶ While it is not misconduct for a juror to state during deliberations that he does not believe a witness is telling the truth and to argue with his fellow jurymen that a witness is unworthy of belief,⁵⁷ a statement by a juror relative to the credibility of a witness based on personal knowledge is misconduct.⁵⁸

Statement by juror, during consideration of issue whether proper lookout had been maintained by operator of mowing machine which cut off legs of three year old child, that juror had operated mowers and knew that operator could have seen child if he had kept proper lookout, constituted injurious misconduct entitling city to new trial.—City of Houston v. Quinones, 177 S.W.2d 259, 142 Tex. 282.

Estimate of speed from skid marks

Fact that juror in automobile collision case was filling station operator and mechanic, and had frequent opportunity to observe skidmarks, did not set apart as expert his opinion from that of other persons on question of how fast a vehicle is traveling when it begins to skid, and in absence of juror's having made tests or other special observations under given conditions, his opinion as to speed just before skidding was not that of a self-appointed expert resulting in misconduct.—Akers v. Juror acquainted with party or witness

It is not proper for a juror who is acquainted with the litigants or their witnesses to communicate to other jurors not so acquainted facts not in the record, which are calculated to influence the verdict in a way different from what it would have been in the absence of such communication.—Ellizondo v. Reagan, Tex.Com.App., 55 S.W.2d 540.

b. General Knowledge on Matters of Common Knowledge

Matters of common knowledge and experience may be used by jurors in arriving at their verdict and in drawing inferences and reaching conclusions from the evidence.

As to matters on which men in general have a common fund of knowledge and experience the jurors are entitled to use their own general knowledge and experience in coming to their verdict;⁵⁹ but they cannot use their own judgment or knowledge as to matters of which knowledge is common only in a particular business or occupation.⁶⁰ Common knowledge and experience may be used in drawing inferences and reaching conclusions from the facts proved.⁶¹ The jurors may resort to their

Comment based on common knowledge

A juror's remark, after jury had retired, that plaintiff could have flown from one city on a certain date on June 26 so as to have been in another city on day that employment contract sued on was allegedly entered into, was no more than a statement based on common knowledge and did not constitute misconduct justifying a new trial.—Cooper Petroleum Co. v. Coghill, Tex.Civ.App., 198 S.W.2d 616.

Notorious and unquestioned matters

Jurors may within a limited sphere apply their general knowledge on notorious and unquestioned matters, and to that extent it is unnecessary for a party to offer evidence on the matter.—Holt v. Pariser, 54 A.2d 89, 161 Pa.Super. 315.

Matters held to be of common knowledge

(1) Present means of traffic over city streets.—City of New Haven v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 57 A.2d 494, 134 Conn. 322.

(2) Conditions wrought by war in determining whether repairs to truck damaged by defendant were made in reasonable time.—Holt v. Pariser, 54 A.2d 89, 161 Pa.Super. 315.

(3) Jurors' common knowledge and experiences with automobiles.—Blue Diamond Motor Bus Co. v. Hale, Tex. Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 228, error dismissed.

(4) Mechanical effect of various steps taken in operation of automobiles.—Oliver v. Bereano, 48 N.Y.S.2d 142, 267 App.Div. 747, affirmed 60 N. E.2d 134, 293 N.Y. 931.

(5) Nature of mechanical devices in common use.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Horton, Tex.Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 122, error dismissed.

(6) Life and annuity tables.—Jones v. Atlantic Refining Co., D.C. Pa., 55 F.Supp. 17.

(7) That a plastic substance is one capable of being moulded and being pressed into form, that in its use for setting tile or glass it would be employed while soft and not in rigid form, and that cement is a plastic substance which when employed for like purpose would be used in a soft form.—Eagles v. National Plate & Window Glass Co., 45 N.E.2d 402, 312 Mass. 463.

(8) Common effect on vision of one walking by the aid of artificial light in a dark or semidark place, when the light is suddenly withdrawn, and of the fact that in such case it takes time for the sight to become adjusted.—Mello v. New England Theatres, 52 N.E.2d 19, 315 Mass. 171.

Professional services

Where services for which plaintiff seeks recovery involves professional services calling for special skill, value of which is not a matter of common knowledge, jury may not wholly disregard the evidence of value and substitute their own judgment for the evidence.—Tuttle v. Brayton, supra.

Consideration of testimony of experts

(1) Findings of jury, in matters outside field of general knowledge and cases wherein testimony of experts or persons particularly familiar with matters at issue is necessary, must be based on witnesses' testimony or other evidence made part of record.—Gange v. Gange, N. D., 56 N. W.2d 688.

(2) If the opinions of experts as given in evidence do not comport with jury's ideas of sound logic, the jurors have a right to say so.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Hears, 190 S.W.2d 62, 144 Tex. 317—Motley v. Mielsch, Civ.App., 199 S.W.2d 552, reversed on other grounds 200 S.W.2d 622, 156 Tex. 557—Hudson v. West Central Drilling Co., Tex.Civ.App., 195 S.W. 2d 387, error refused no reversible error.

(3) In determining weight to be given to evidence of experts the jury should apply their general knowledge to the evidence and such opinions should not be blindly received by the jury but should control only as they are found reasonable.—Richey & Gilbert Co. v. Northwestern Natural Gas Corp., 134 P.2d 444, 16 Wash.2d 631.

own general knowledge on the subject of inquiry to test the credibility of witnesses,⁶² or to judge of the weight and force of the evidence.⁶³

§ 464. — Knowledge Derived from View or Inspection

While in some jurisdictions the result of a juror's observation on an authorized view or inspection is evidence, in others it is not so regarded but the purpose of the observation is solely to enable the jurors better to understand and apply the evidence in the case.

Under the rule prevailing in many states, the result of a juror's observation on an authorized inspection or view is evidence which may be considered, in connection with the other evidence regularly produced on trial, in making up the verdict.⁶⁴

Estimates of time and distance

Estimates of time and distance by witnesses are proper matters to be considered and weighed by jury in the light of common sense and experience.—DeRossett v. Malone, 239 S.W.2d 366, 34 Tenn.App. 461.

Not restricted to facts directly proved

Jurors are not restricted to a consideration of facts directly proved but may give effect to such inferences as reasonably may be drawn from them.—McCarty v. Weber, 60 N.W.2d 716, 265 Wis. 70—De Keuster v. Green Bay & W. R. Co., 59 N.W.2d 452, 264 Wis. 476.

Circumstantial evidence

Where circumstantial evidence is relied on, jurors may draw on their own experience to determine the proper inferences to be deduced therefrom in so far as matters within the realm of common experience are concerned.—Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Service Co., 222 P.2d 307, 99 Cal.App. 2d 690.

Value and damages

(1) In estimating the value of domestic services rendered by a wife and mother, jury is authorized to consider what may be the value of many services incapable of exact proof, but measured in the light of the jury's own observation and experience.

In other jurisdictions, although the jury can consider and apply the evidence in the light of the knowledge obtained by their inspection,⁶⁵ and they need not completely disregard everything they saw and every impression they received from their view,⁶⁶ the things the jurors may observe during the view or inspection cannot under any circumstances be treated as evidence, the purpose of the observation being solely to enable the jurors better to understand the situation and better to understand and apply the evidence in the case.⁶⁷ Even under the first view the verdict must be supported by some evidence other than that derived by the jurors from their view;⁶⁸ and they cannot arbitrarily disregard the evidence regularly produced on trial and base their verdict solely on the result of their observations, if the case is not one that turns on the absence or presence of a physical fact which the jury may see for themselves, and is a case which no amount of oral testimony can affect.⁶⁹ Under the second view where the issue is as to a physical fact which the jurors could determine by their senses in making the view, the jurors may disregard testimony to the effect that the fact is otherwise

Pleadings amended by view

If any facts were observed by jury on authorized inspection that were not well pleaded, the pleadings were amended to that extent.—Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Jenkins, 82 S.W.2d 15, 190 Ark. 930.

Physical appearance of witness

In personal injury action, where plaintiff, who had sustained permanent scar on forehead and nose, was a witness so that trial judge and jurors saw scar, what they saw was evidence to be considered in determining amount of damages.—Sassano v. Rouillard, 81 P.2d 213, 27 Cal.App.2d 372.

dence to be offered during a view of premises since act of viewing is not part of trial.—State v. McVeigh, 214 P.2d 165, 35 Wash.2d 493.

Duty to introduce evidence

A jury view will not serve to take from party on whom burden of proof lies duty of introducing sufficient other evidence on which jury could properly hold that party on whom burden of proof lies has sustained that burden by evidence other than jury's view.—Frampton v. Consolidated Bus Lines, 62 S.E.2d 126, 134 W.Va. 816.

View not reception of evidence

(2) In action against hotel by guest for injuries sustained while descending stairway, where hotel's witness, a tile setter, testified that broken tiles could not have been replaced without new mortar joints revealing by their color the fact that repairs had been made, and some of jurors applied that test when they viewed the premises, and from their own examination came to conclusion that witness was mistaken in his testimony denying that repairs had been made, the rules that evidence may not be taken at the view and that jury may not arrive at their verdict by personal knowledge of facts were not violated.—Dempsey-Vanderbilt Hotel v. § 465. Papers and Articles Which May Be Taken or Sent to Jury Room

- a. General rule
- b. Law books and dictionaries
- c. Verdict on former trial of same case
- d. Models and maps

a. General Rule

It is largely a matter in the discretion of the trial court what papers may be taken into the jury room by the jury.

As a general rule what papers may be taken by the jury into the jury room rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.⁷¹ With respect to minutes and stenographer's notes of testimony, the jury may consider the testimony of witnesses only in its oral form,⁷² and normally neither notes of testimony nor portions thereof can be sent to the jury,⁷³ and it is reversible error that the jury by mistake take with them a typewritten copy of the stenographer's notes of a party's testimony in chief, although as soon as the mistake is discovered the jury are also given a copy of the cross-examination.⁷⁴ However, the minutes of the testimony may be sent out with the jury when both parties consent.⁷⁵ On the other hand, in some jurisdictions, the matter of causing the stenographer's notes to be read and of submitting copies of the whole or portions of them to the jury rests in the discretion of the trial judge.⁷⁶

b. Law Books and Dictionaries

It is generally error for the jury to take law books or dictionaries with them to refer to during deliberations.

It is reversible error to permit the jury to take law books with them so that they can determine the law for themselves;⁷⁷ but, in the absence of a showing that the jury examined or used the reports, error cannot be predicated on the fact that reports, used by the judge in preparing his instructions, and marked by him at places where there were cases similar to the one involved, were left in the jury room during deliberations.⁷⁸ Where the evidence of foreign law consists of statutes or judicial opinions, the court may, in its discretion, decline to send them to the jury.⁷⁹ Unless it can be determined that no prejudice resulted to a party,⁸⁰ it generally is ground for reversal that the jury obtained and took into the jury room a dictionary which they consulted to determine the meaning of legal⁸¹ or other terms,⁸² which they do not understand.

c. Verdict on Former Trial of Same Case

It is improper for the jury to take with them a verdict rendered on a former trial, at least where such verdict is given consideration during deliberations.

While it is reprehensible conduct for a juror to seek to find out how the jury stood on a former trial of the case,⁸³ the taking by the jury of a

Notes of testimony at other trial

In action for injuries received by plaintiff wife as result of an automobile collision with vehicle of defendant, sending out to jury all notes of testimony of former trial of personal injury action brought by plaintiff wife was error, and not even relevant portions of testimony could go out to jury, since such methods tended to emphasize one part of testimony above other parts.—Zank v. Incompetent evidence

Action of officer in charge of jury in supplying jury with dictionary at their request during deliberations without consent of plaintiff vitiated verdict, since officer had no right to take the place of the court and assist the jury in any way in its consideration of the evidence and since the dictionary was incompetent evidence and its exclusion would have been required if offered as evidence during trial.—Daniels v. Barker, 200 A. 410, 89 N.H. 416.

verdict rendered on a former trial will not result in a reversal where it is shown that the verdict was not seen by the jurors;⁸⁴ or that such verdict was not read by the jurors until they had agreed on their own;⁸⁵ or that the jury were distinctly instructed to treat it as if it did not exist, and to found their verdict on the evidence before them.⁸⁶ It has been held not ground for reversal that the jury were permitted to take with them the complaint on which was indorsed the verdict rendered on a former trial of the case, no objection being made thereto and it not having been done fraudulently or designedly to influence the verdict.⁸⁷

Models and maps used to explain testimony of witnesses may be taken to the jury room and given consideration by the jury during their deliberations.

It is generally held that the jury may be permitted to take with them models,⁸⁸ or maps or diagrams,⁸⁹ which have been used to illustrate or explain the testimony of the witnesses; but it has been said that maps or diagrams of this character, whether formally received in evidence or treated merely as illustrative of the witnesses' testimony, are to be considered only in connection with the other evidence, and are not to be taken to the jury room on final submission;⁹⁰ and it has been held error to permit the jury to take a map which was altered after it was admitted in evidence.⁹¹ It is usually said that the court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow papers and articles of this character to go to the jury;⁹² but it has been held an abuse of discretion, and reversible error, for the court, without cause, to refuse to send to the jury a map or plan admitted in evidence and exhibiting the place of the accident.⁹³

§ 466. — Papers, Documents, and Articles in Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Depositions
- c. Papers attached to depositions

a. In General

As a general rule the trial court may, in its discretion, permit the jury to take to the jury room writings and other tangible objects which have been admitted in evidence.

While there are some cases which hold, without qualification, that the jury should not be permitted to take with them to the jury room books, papers, or documents which have been admitted in evidence,⁹⁴ and others that to grant such permission is erroneous unless with the consent of the parties,⁹⁵ the general rule is that the trial court may, in its discretion, properly permit the jury to take with them, on retiring to consider their verdict, the writings and other tangible objects which have been admitted in evidence,⁹⁶ even without the consent of

At common law, the practice was against allowing the jury to take exhibits to the jury room, but at present trial court may in its discretion allow the parties,⁹⁷ and even though they might not be directly involved in the case.⁹⁸ A statute, providing that "papers introduced in evidence" may be sent with the jury, simply modifies and extends the common-law rule as to exhibits containing writings, so that written exhibits may be sent to the jury whether or not under seal, and the statute in no way restricts the common-law power of the court to send exhibits not in writing to the jury.⁹⁹

Generally, unless there is a statute or rule of court providing that the jury may take with them, on retiring for deliberation, all papers which have been received or read in evidence,¹ and even then exhibits to be taken to the jury.—Eller v. Crowell, Mo., 238 S.W.2d 310.

Exercise of discretion held not abused

(1) Sending to jury room all exhibits present in court.

Ill.—Dinwiddle v. Siefkin, 20 N.E.2d 130, 299 Ill.App. 316.

Mich.—Rich v. Daily Creamery Co., 6 N.W.2d 539, 303 Mich. 344.

(2) Allowing jury to take with them in civil case criminal record of plaintiff offered to attack his credibility.—Forcier v. Hopkins, 110 N.E.2d 126, 329 Mass. 688.

(3) Allowing will of deceased to go to jury when only signature therein was offered in evidence.—In re Cheney's Estate, 274 N.W. 5, 23 Iowa 1076.

(4) Permitting decree to be taken to jury room without it having been read to jury first, since a document admitted in evidence does not have to be read to jury before it may be taken to jury room.—Ridgway v. Crum, 98 N.E.2d 394, 343 Ill.App. 12.

(5) In action against executor on note executed by deceased, sending to jury room of photographs of deceased's signature and of signature to note, containing markings made by handwriting expert in comparing signatures.—In re Cheney's Estate, 274 N.W. 5, 23 Iowa 1076.

(6) Sending out with jury, of unsigned duplicate copy of statement alleged to have been adopted by plaintiff to effect that defendants did not cause automobile accident.—Brenner v. Leshner, 2 A.2d 731, 332 Pa. 522.

(7) Allowing jury to take memorandum amounting to admission against interest which was read to jury and exhibited to them, notwithstanding memorandum was not marked for identification or formally introduced in evidence.—Hilker v. Agricultural Bond & Credit Corp., Tex.Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 544, error dismissed.

Exercise of discretion held abused

Submission to jury of complete copies of each of three newspaper articles, only portions of which referred to plaintiff, in special issues as to truth or falsity thereof in libel suit was error.—Houston Printing Co. v. Hunter, Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 312, error dismissed, affirmed 106 S.W.2d 1043, 129 Tex. 652.

Evidence introduced after charge to jury

Where, through oversight in action for disability benefits under life policy, X-ray plates explained to jury by medical witnesses were not formally offered in evidence until after charge to jury, subsequently admitting plates and permitting them to be taken out by jury did not constitute abuse of discretion.—Becker v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 188 A. 400, 124 Pa.Super. 138.

Erroneously admitted evidence

(1) Permitting jury to take to jury room and consider exhibits erroneously admitted over defendants' objections was error.—Evola Realty Co. v. Westerfield, Ky., 251 S.W.2d 298.

(2) Photographs portraying things immaterial to any issue in case which were improperly and erroneously received in evidence should not be subject to examination by jury after they have retired to deliberate on issues submitted to them.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Crow, 221 S.W.2d 235, 148 Tex. 113, 10 A.L.R.2d 913.

"Papers read in evidence"

Physician's book was not a paper read in evidence which might be carried from the bar by the jury and its refusal is not error where the so-called impeaching portion of the book was equivalent to a sworn statement impeaching a witness.—Nordhaus v. Marek, 45 N.E.2d 933, 317 Ill.App. 351.

1. Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Crow, 221 S.W.2d 235, 148 Tex. 113, 10 A.L.R.2d 913.

64 C.J. p 1027 note 1.

Test of admissibility of a document that comes within category of written evidence within rule permitting jury to take written evidence with them into retirement does not turn on whether jurors can understand it.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Crow, supra.

Refusal qualified by condition

Refusal to allow jury to take certain evidence to jury room was error notwithstanding court qualified refusal with condition that, if jury had requested such evidence during their deliberations, it would be given to them.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Durkee, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 222, error refused no reversible error—

Bankers Life Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, v. Butler, Tex.Civ.App., 122 S.W.2d 1077.

On motion of parties

(1) Under rule permitting jury to take written evidence to jury room, it is mandatory on trial judge on written motion of either party to send to jury room any written instrument or evidence properly admitted during trial.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Applegate, Tex.Civ.App., 205 S.W.2d 412, error refused no reversible error.

(2) The mere absence of a request from jury to take out with the jury in their retirement photographs admitted in evidence does not justify refusal of a request from a party that photographs be sent out or, by itself, render error of such refusal, harmless.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Orr, 215 S.W.2d 862, 147 Tex. 383.

Matters held within statute or rule

(1) Ordinary photographs constitute written evidence within rule permitting jury to take written evidence with them into retirement.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Crow, 221 S.W.2d 235, 148 Tex. 113, 10 A.L.R.2d 913.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Durkee, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 222, refused no reversible error.—Younger Bros v. Ross, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 621, error dismissed.

(2) Where photographs and documentary evidence disclose facts on vital controverted issues, court should not speculate on rights of the parties and assume that no injury resulted from violation of court rule providing that jury may take with them in their retirement any written evidence except depositions of witnesses.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Durkee, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 222, refused no reversible error.

(3) X-ray pictures of injured employee's fractured arm, introduced in compensation proceeding constituted written evidence within rule permitting jury to take written evidence with them into retirement and could not be excluded on ground that they were technical and unintelligible to average juror.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Crow, supra.

Matters held not within statute or rule

(1) Excerpts from a transcript of court reporter's notes of testimony of defendant taken in another trial, introduced in evidence by plaintiff to impeach defendant, were not written evidence within rule permitting jury according to some authorities,² the trial court may, in its discretion, refuse to permit papers or objects which have been admitted in evidence to be taken by the jury;³ but there is some authority which regards the sending of a paper in evidence to the jury as a valuable right of the party offering it, the denial of which is reversible error;⁴ and, where there is no doubt or question as to the accuracy and materiality of exhibits which have been admitted in evidence, it is an abuse of discretion for the court, without cause, to refuse to send them to the jury on being requested to do so.⁵ Also, the court cannot properly refuse to allow the jury to take all the written evidence bearing on a given point where it allows a part of such evidence to be taken.⁶ Although permitted to do so, the jury are not bound to take out papers in evidence.⁷ The fact that the jury, through mistake,⁸ or even contrary to the directions of the court,⁹ take with them to the jury room articles which have been offered in evidence will not vitiate the verdict where it does not appear that such action was prejudicial to the party complaining.

Necessity that counsel be present or notified. If there is no statute to the contrary, the court may send documents in evidence to the jury in the absence of, and without notice to, counsel.¹⁰

b. Depositions

Generally, it is error for the court to permit the jury to take to the jury room depositions which have been read on trial.

It has been held in many jurisdictions either with,¹¹ or without,¹² apparent statutory basis therefor that it is error to permit the jury to take to their room depositions which have been read on trial. Within this rule are affidavits or statements which have been read in evidence as the testimony of a witness,¹³ or which have been admitted to impeach a witness.¹⁴ Statutes providing without exception that papers read or used in evidence may be taken by the jury are usually held not to abrogate the rule or authorize or require that depositions be sent out with the jury.¹⁵

(2) Where certain checks were admitted to enable jury to determine from plaintiff's signatures thereto whether plaintiff could write, signatures were not read in evidence without statute providing that where only part of paper has been read in evidence, excluded part must be detached before jury may take paper with them.—*Price v. Documents of limited purposes

In cases involving attorney's fees, trial court should permit no extraneous argument to be based on documents competent only as bearing on value and extent of services performed, should carefully instruct as to limited purpose of their reception in evidence, and in exercise of sound discretion should not permit such documents to be taken to jury room.—Elliott v. Brown, 111 N.E.2d 169, 349 Ill.App. 428.

On the other hand, in a number of jurisdictions, it is considered proper to permit depositions to be taken out with the jury on their retirement.¹⁶ Under this latter rule it is largely discretionary with the court whether or not permission will be given to take the depositions,¹⁷ and especially may it exercise its discretion and refuse permission where part of the deposition, which cannot be separated from the rest without mutilation, contains incompetent evidence which has been ruled out.¹⁸ Indeed, it has been held reversible error to send the jury a deposition containing inadmissible matter which is indicated only by pencil marks, although the judge instructs the jury not to consider the excluded matter.¹⁹ Under some statutes the court on request of the jury for a deposition of a witness may give its recollection as to the testimony sought by the jury, or such testimony may be read by a court stenographer in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or their counsel.²⁰ Although the propriety of sending depositions to the jury is denied, it is not reversible error to do so where it appears that no prejudice can result,²¹ or timely objection is not made.²²

c. Papers Attached to Depositions

Papers attached to a deposition and which have the character of evidence apart from the deposition, may as a general rule, be detached and taken to the jury room.

Generally, where papers attached to a deposition have the character of evidence independent of their connection with the deposition, they may be permitted to be detached and taken to the jury room,²³ although the court, where no prejudice results, may, in its discretion, refuse such permission.²⁴ If the attached paper is not introduced in evidence independently, but is only in evidence as a part of the deposition, it cannot be sent to the jury if the deposition itself cannot;²⁵ and it has been held error to permit the jury to take papers detached from the deposition where the effect of such taking is to give them a wrong impression of the facts in controversy.²⁶

§ 467. — Papers and Articles Not in Evidence

The jury should not take with them to the jury room papers and articles not in evidence.

As a general rule it is improper or error,²⁷ constituting in some cases reversible error, to permit the jury, even by mistake,²⁸ to take with them to the jury room papers or articles not properly in evidence, and which would tend to influence the verdict.²⁹ However, the verdict will not be reversed where it appears that the jurors' verdict was not prejudicially influenced by their possession of such papers³⁰ or by their having before them,

"Handbook for Jurors"

Directing impaneled jurors' attention to a "Handbook for Jurors," which contained valuable information with respect to general jury system improperly, such articles;³¹ or counsel has failed to perform his duty to examine the documents proposed to be sent with the jury during their deliberations;³² or where counsel by his action has waived any objections he may have had to the papers taken by the jury.³³ A statute or rule which authorizes the jury to take any written evidence with them on retiring impliedly excludes any written exhibit or illustrative writing or drawing not introduced in evidence.³⁴

Where a portion of a book, paper, or document is excluded from evidence, the jury should not be permitted to take the paper on retirement unless something is pasted over the excluded portion,³⁵ or it is withheld from the jury in some other effectual mode,³⁶ and it has been held error to send the entire paper to the jury room with no safeguard against their examining the parts of the paper which have not been admitted in evidence, except a direction to examine only the part which has been admitted;³⁷ but the sending of the eliminated portion has been held not prejudicial error where the maker of the document was fully cross-examined with respect to it.³⁸ It is not error for the court to refuse to allow the jury to take a paper, document,³⁹ or article⁴⁰ which has not been admitted in evidence.

Some cases have recognized exceptions to the general rule and hold that, if the jury are informed that such papers are not in evidence, it is not error to permit them to take a paper, which is a mere calculation, account, or estimate of what is claimed and is fully supported by the evidence,⁴¹ a bill testified to as being correct,⁴² a memorandum or document used by a witness in giving his testimony,⁴³ an index or key to evidence to enable the jury more readily to determine the matters in dispute,⁴⁴ or a model, map, or diagram used to explain the testimony of witnesses, as discussed supra § 465 e. If counsel for both parties consent to giving the jury papers not in evidence this cannot afterwards be urged as an objection to the verdict.⁴⁵

§ 468. — Instructions

In some jurisdictions the trial court, in its discretion, may allow the jury to take instructions with them to the jury room.

In the absence of statute or absolute rule of practice, it is often held that the trial court, in its discretion, may allow,⁴⁶ or refuse to allow,⁴⁷ the jury to take the instructions with them when they and jury's duties as citizens, etc., did not constitute error on ground that jurors trying case received instructions not signed by trial judge—Shuford v. City of Dallas, 190 S.W.2d 721, 144 Tex. 342.

Commendable practice

It is not only permissible but commendable for trial court to permit jury to take into jury room a copy of written instructions—Valley Nat. Bank v. Witter, 121 P.2d 414, 58 Ariz. 491.

Instructions are presiding judge's written address, informing jury of law applicable to given facts constituting cause at trial, and are to be carried by jury to their room for guidance in reaching correct verdict according to law and evidence.—Palmer v. Hygrade Water & Soda Co., 151 S.W.2d 548, 236 Mo.App. 247.

Re-reading instruction

The re-reading to jury of one of the instructions by jury foreman as urged by defendants' counsel in his argument was not error, where instruction re-read was a proper one.—Moyer v. Dolese Bros. Co., 178 P.2d 270, 162 Kan. 484.

47. Okl.—Lowenstein v. Holmes, 135 P. 727, 40 Okl. 33.

retire to deliberate; but, while the court may allow the jury either to take all the instructions, or withhold all, it has been held reversible error for the court, even by accident, to separate the instructions and give the jury part and retain part.⁴⁸ According to some authority the jury should not be permitted to take the instructions,⁴⁹ at least, without the consent of both parties.⁵⁰ However, the sending of the instructions to the jury is sometimes regarded merely as an irregularity which does not require a reversal if no prejudice is shown;⁵¹ and it has been held that a reversal will not be granted because the court inadvertently permitted the jury to have part of the instructions, where no prejudicial misconduct occurs and the court, on discovering the mistake, recalls the jury, takes the instructions from their possession, and instructs them to give all instructions equal weight.⁵²

Under a statute providing that all written instructions whether given or refused, and so marked, may be taken by the jury to the jury room, it has been held that the court may,⁵³ and must on request,⁵⁴ permit the instructions to be taken by the jury. Although the statute provides that the court shall allow the jury to take the written instructions at the request of either party, it is not error for the court to permit the instructions to be taken at the request of jurors alone.⁵⁵ A provision that all written charges and instructions shall be taken by the jurors in their retirement authorizes,⁵⁶ and requires,⁵⁷ the court to send out special written instructions presented by the parties, and given to the jury on request, although the general charges of the court are oral and cannot be sent out with the jury. Where to such a statute a proviso is added that, if either party objects to the giving of written instructions and permitting the jury to take them to their room, a different prescribed course of procedure shall be followed, the court, despite an objection to the sending of written instructions, is bound to send them to the jury if there is not also an objection to the giving of written instructions.⁵⁸ Failure of the jury to take instructions to the jury room has been held not error where it was the result of negligence of defendant's attorney.⁵⁹

Where interlined matters in instructions are not obliterated so that the jury cannot read them, the taking of such instructions by the jury is improper.⁶⁰

§ 469. — Pleadings

In some jurisdictions the court in its discretion may allow the jury to take the pleadings with them to the jury room, at least where no prejudice results thereby.

According to many cases the trial court may, in its discretion, without committing reversible error, permit the jury to take the pleadings with them to the jury room,⁶¹ at least, where the court has given the proper explanations, and cautionary instructions,⁶² or there are no prejudicial results,⁶³ or the instructions are so framed as to be meaningless to the jury without the pleadings.⁶⁴ Also, it is not reversible error to send the pleadings to the jury where it is done with the consent of counsel,⁶⁵ and, where the action involves a great number of articles which the jury cannot be expected to remember without aid, it is proper for the court to let them take the bill of particulars containing the inventory of the articles.⁶⁶ However, it is often stated broadly that the jury should not be allowed to take the pleadings to the jury room,⁶⁷ at least where the pleadings were not introduced in evidence,⁶⁸ and to permit them to do so has been regarded as error where the pleadings are involved, voluminous, and technical,⁶⁹ or contain matters which should not be considered by the jury,⁷⁰ or, because of a probable misconstruction of the pleadings, the jury might render their verdict otherwise than they would render it had the pleadings not been sent.⁷¹

The fact that the pleadings contain admissions does not necessarily alter the rule that pleadings should not be taken to the jury room, since in such instances the court may point out to the jury such admissions as are relevant.⁷² As considered supra § 301, it is the duty of the court to state the issues made by the pleadings rather than to refer the jury to the pleadings to ascertain the issues; and even courts which do not regard it as reversible error have said that the practice of sending the pleadings to the jury room is one of doubtful propriety⁷³ which is not to be commended,⁷⁴ and is even to be condemned as unsafe and likely to work prejudice.⁷⁵ Furthermore, courts, which generally recognize the right to take or send the pleadings to the jury room, make an exception in the case of pleadings, or portions thereof, which have been previously eliminated from the case by motion,⁷⁶ demurrer,⁷⁷ or otherwise.⁷⁸

The trial court is under no obligation to permit the jury to take the pleadings to the jury room, and error cannot be assigned because of its refusal to do so;⁷⁹ nor is the jury under any duty to read the pleadings, and it is error to instruct them to do so.⁸⁰ A statute prohibiting pleadings which do not constitute written evidence to be taken by the jury in retirement has been held to be mandatory.⁸¹

§ 470. Experiments by Jury and Use of Magnifying Glass or Mechanical Device

Jurors cannot make experiments which would amount to a taking of evidence out of open court.

Although it has been said that the jurors cannot make experiments which invade new fields and lead to such discoveries as will amount to a taking of evidence out of open court,⁸² it is usually held not ground for reversal that the jurors have performed experiments with exhibits or articles which they have taken to the jury room;⁸³ and it is not

Submitting to jury bill of particulars, which was not in evidence, was improper, but did not warrant setting aside verdict for plaintiffs and ordering a new trial, where it did not appear that the only statement contained in bill of particulars which was at variance with the proof could have brought about a verdict for plaintiffs which would not have been rendered but for submission of bill and jury was instructed bill was merely a statement of plaintiffs' claims and was not to be considered as evidence.—Pescara v. Experiment in court by jurors

Where, in an action against a railroad for loss by fire, spark arresters were received in evidence, it was within the discretion of the trial court to permit experiments by the jury in court by the use of cinders, improper for the jury to use a magnifying glass or mechanical device to aid their investigation of handwritings or exhibits which have been admitted in evidence and are properly taken into the jury room by them.⁸⁴

§ 471. Consideration and Decision of Special Interrogatories or Special Issues

Jurors are under a duty during deliberations to answer special interrogatories or issues according to the evidence and without regard to how such answers may affect the general verdict.

It is the duty of the jury to answer special interrogatories as they find the facts to be from the evidence without regard to how the answers may affect the general verdict,⁸⁵ and if the jury seek to answer special interrogatories in such a manner as to carry out a previous agreement to give a general verdict in favor of a particular party, this is error or misconduct which requires a reversal;⁸⁶ but if the law does not prescribe the time they shall be considered, and the jurors do not purposely seek to answer the special interrogatories so that judgment will be for the party whom they wish to favor by a general verdict, but give each issue separate consideration and answer it according to the preponderance of the evidence, it is immaterial whether not resembling cinders emitted by engines, although the spark-arresting device when put in an engine is set at an angle, so that the size and shape of the apertures were factors merely in the relative efficiency of the devices in question.—*E. Discussing effect of answers

(1) Discussion of jury as to effect their answers to special issues would have on plaintiff's recovery was not misconduct where it appeared that no agreement was made which would accomplish any particular result, but that each issue was answered according to the law and the evidence.—Ford v. Carpenter, 216 S.W.2d 558, 147 Tex. 447.—Church v. Texas & Pac. Motor Transp. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 994.—Goldstein Hat Mfg. Co. v. Cowen, Tex.Civ.App., 136 S.W.2d 867.

(2) Jury should not deliberately consider the legal effect their answers may have on the rights of parties.—Myers v. Thomas, Civ.App., 182 S.W.2d 266, reversed on other grounds 186 S.W.2d 811, 143 Tex. 502.

(3) Discussion as to whether affirmative answers to certain special issues would conflict with affirmative answers to other special issues and nullify verdict was not misconduct.—Blaugrund v. Gish, Civ.App., 179 S.W.2d 257, affirmed 179 S.W.2d 266, 142 Tex. 379.

Discussion of ordinance

In action for injuries sustained by motorist in intersectional automobile collision, jury was not guilty of "misconduct" in discussing purported rule or law considered to be in effect in the city regulating the traffic of automobiles on the streets before answering special issues as to motorist's contributory negligence, where evidence of such ordinance or rule was offered.—Mecom v. De Blanc, Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 915, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Order of answering

A jury is not required to answer issues in order submitted.—Lee v. Galbreath, Tex.Civ.App., 234 S.W.2d 91.—Hudson v. West Central Drilling Co., Tex.Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 387, error refused no reversible error.

Taking vote before answer

That jury, before answering special issues, took vote as to which party should prevail, was not misconduct, where there was no agreement to be bound by ballot and jurors answered issues without regard to legal effect of answers.—Scottino v. Ledbetter, Tex.Civ.App., 56 S.W.2d 282.

86. Tex.—Ford v. Carpenter, 216 S.W.2d 558, 147 Tex. 447.—Wood v. Stokes, Civ.App., 219 S.W.2d 545, error dismissed.—Lyons v. Cope, Civ.App., 217 S.W.2d 116.—*Straffuss v. Damages

When an action for personal injuries is submitted to a jury on special issues, it is improper for jurors to agree in advance on amount of damages to be awarded and then undertake to answer issues on liability in such way as to carry out original agreement.—Texas Elec. Ry. Co. v. Swofford, Tex.Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 938.

(1) In general.—Straffuss v. Barclay, Civ.App., 214 S.W.2d 826, affirmed 219 S.W.2d 65, 147 Tex. 600.—Snow v. Harding, Tex.Civ.App., 180 S.W.2d 965, error refused.—Patterson v. Peel, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 284, error refused, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 297, 314 U.S. 686, 86 L.Ed. 549, rehearing denied 62 S.Ct. 411, 314 U.S. 715, 86 L.Ed. 570.—Sulser v. Kyser, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 592, error dismissed.

(2) In jury's agreement to return answers to special issues on belief result of answers would be hung jury.—Perotke v. City of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 44 S.W.2d 473.

(3) Fact that sentiment expressed on straw vote of jurors and the legal effect of verdict on special issues coincided does not prove an unlawful agreement or that jurors were guided by a desire to accomplish a certain legal result.—Buckalew v. Butcher-Arthur, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 214 S.W.2d 184, refused no reversible error.

(4) Fact that jury communicated in writing to trial court that they favored defendant, but did not know how to answer a certain special issue, did not establish misconduct in absence of evidence that irrespective of the facts jury arbitrarily attempted to answer issue so as to bring about a verdict favorable to defendant, since, in absence of such proof, presumption must be indulged that jury followed instructions of court.—Bauguss v. Bauguss, Tex.Civ.App., 186 S.W.2d 384, refused without merit.

the jury consider the special interrogatories before or after they have agreed on a general verdict.⁸⁷

Where misconduct of the jury is shown while they were considering and preparing their answers to special issues, the cause will be reversed, unless the record clearly shows that such misconduct did not influence any juror in arriving at his answers to the issues submitted,⁸⁸ or where such misconduct would not affect the judgment.⁸⁹ To induce a juror to change his answer to a material issue, on representations on the part of other jurors that it is immaterial how such issue is answered insofar as plaintiff's recovery is concerned, constitutes misconduct on the part of the jury.⁹⁰ Answering a special issue contrary to what the jurors believe is the fact with respect thereto, under the assumption that the answer to such issue is immaterial, is misconduct.⁹¹ While it is the duty of the jury to answer each issue independently,⁹² it is not material misconduct for the jury to fail to answer, or to give an answer contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence,⁹³ or to discuss matter not in evidence relating to a special issue,⁹⁴ at least where the answer to the special issue affected becomes immaterial due to other findings made by the jury in the case.⁹⁵ The fact that some of the jurors are ignorant of the legal effect of their answers to special issues is immaterial, since the legal effect of the answers is no concern of the jurors.⁹⁶

Under a statute providing that special issues shall be answered separately, the jury must consider and determine each issue submitted to them without reference to the result of their determination on the disposition of the controversy as a whole⁹⁷ or on the answers to other issues.⁹⁸ The fact that a juror has an opinion as to which party should prevail does not make him guilty of misconduct if he considers each special issue without regard to the legal effect of the answer.⁹⁹

§ 472. Arriving at Verdict by Chance, Compromise, or Taking of Average

- a. In general
- b. Compromise verdicts
- c. Quotient verdicts or averaging estimates of jurors
- d. Averaging estimates of witnesses

a. In General

Generally, a verdict arrived at by chance or lot, or in any manner but through the exercise of judgment and conviction, will be set aside.

Since every verdict should be the result of the exercise of judgment, reflection, and conscientious conviction, on the part of the jury, as discussed supra § 462, and not be the result of chance or lot,¹ it is the general rule that a verdict arrived

Majority vote on issues

Where jury agreed in advance to determine some of issues by majority vote, verdict was tainted with misconduct requiring new trial notwithstanding each juror assented to answers on each question in jury room and when polled in open court—Stroope v. Chance verdicts are improper

Utah.—Mitchell v. Arrowhead Freight Lines, 214 P.2d 620, 117 Utah 224.

"Chance" defined

The word "chance," within rule that verdict adopted by chance is invalid, is not technical, but according to its generally accepted and ordinary use, anything is said to have happened by "chance" to anyone, which was neither understandingly brought about by his act nor pre-estimated by his understanding, and juror resorts at by chance or lot will be set aside.² The verdict is vitiated if the jurors forego the exercise of their judgment, surrender their convictions, and render the verdict pursuant to an agreement that it shall be for an amount fixed by a limited number of jurors;³ an agreement to abide by the decision of a majority;⁴ or an agreement by some of the jurors to surrender their convictions as to which party should have the verdict in consideration of an agreement by the others to sign a statement that they believe a certain party has willfully testified falsely,⁵ or to limit the amount of damages which should be awarded to the successful party.⁶

While an illegal verdict reached by lot or chance may be repudiated and a subsequent valid one, founded on due and candid deliberation, be rendered,⁷ a mere subsequent assent to a verdict illegally reached by lot will not validate the verdict where the subsequent assent is but a declaration of willingness to stand by the result of the lot.⁸ In some jurisdictions the rule that a verdict arrived at by chance shall be void has been adopted by statute,⁹ and, to determine whether the verdict was or was not so arrived at, the affidavits of the individual jurors are admissible.¹⁰

A compromise verdict which represents a surrender by some jurors of conscientious convictions on one material issue in return for relinquishment by others of like settled opinion on another issue is unconscionable and invalid.

While it is often said that the jury may, where the damages sought to be recovered are unliquidated, properly compromise or make mutual concessions as to the amount to be awarded,¹¹ the jury cannot render a valid verdict which was arrived at by way of a compromise by which some jurors surrendered their conscientious convictions as to some material issues or right of recovery in return for certain concessions by the other jurors on another issue or issues,¹² nor can the jurors compromise the to "chance" whenever he adopts any method of determination, the steps and results of which are beyond his calculation and not followed or participated in by his understanding.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Marshall's Adm'x, 158 S.W.2d 137, 289 Ky. 129.

64 C.J. p 1034 note 12.

Effect of agreement

(1) The evil effect of agreement by jurors binding themselves in advance to abide by decision of majority is not relieved by jury's agreement thereafter to a slightly different verdict, if it appears previous agreement induced or entered into result.—Kindy v. Willingham, 209 S.W.2d 585, 146 Tex. 548.

(2) On the other hand the vice of an agreement by jurors to abide by the decision of the majority is removed where it appears that the jurors completely disregarded or abandoned the agreement and were not activated by it in the subsequent adoption of the verdict returned.—Kindy v. Willingham, supra.

Lack of antecedent agreement

Where two or three jurors refused to vote for or against proposal to abide by decision of majority, proposal never became an antecedent agreement and did not vitiate verdicts subsequently reached by jury.—Ollins v. Schocket, 215 S.W.2d 18, 31 Tenn. App. 346.

Making known opinions prior to agreement

"Various" means several, or different, or uncertain, but does not include all or the whole, and finding that jury members had made known their positions on "various" issues before agreeing to abide by a vote of the majority indicated neither a definite commitment nor a tentative opinion on all of them, but finding impliedly excluded some of the issues.—Kindy v. Willingham, 209 S.W.2d 585, 146 Tex. 548.

claims of the parties without properly deciding the material issues.¹³ A verdict for inadequate damages where plaintiff is entitled to recover either more substantial damages or none,¹⁴ or a verdict for less than the amount claimed, where the damages are fixed and liquidated and the verdict under the law and evidence must be either for the amount claimed by plaintiff or as claimed by defendant,¹⁵ may generally be set aside by either party as an invalid compromise verdict; but it is only where the verdict cannot be justified on any hypothesis presented by the evidence that it will be set aside as a compromise verdict;¹⁶ and, where the jury have used discretion in fixing the fair value of a thing, the verdict is not necessarily invalid as a compromise because it is for less than plaintiff sought and more than defendant claimed he should receive,¹⁷ or because the verdict was for less than the amount proved.¹⁸

Grossly inadequate verdict distinguished

To consider a verdict for plaintiff a compromise, as distinguished from being grossly inadequate, requires finding that jury felt defendant was not liable or was dubious about defendant's liability, but that jury was emotionally swayed by nature and extent of injuries and special damages.—Carrouseaux v. City of New York, 127 N.Y.S.2d 761.

Verdict held justified

(1) In general.—Clancy v. Reid-Ward Motor Co., 170 S.W.2d 161, 237 Mo.App. 1000.

(2) In automobile collision case, inadequacy of verdict for plaintiff would not justify conclusion that verdict was result of compromise or an effort to give plaintiff something from the insurance company, so as to render it improper to order new trial solely on issue of damages.—Lilly v. Boswell, 242 S.W.2d 73, 362 Mo. 444.

(3) In action for fraud, verdict which was not necessarily a compromise and amount of which was justifiable on the record should not have been set aside.—F. A. MacCluer, Inc. v. Distribuidores Industriales S. De R. L., 68 N.Y.S.2d 349, 271 App.Div. 987.

(4) Verdict finding grantor was mentally capable of executing two deeds but lacked capacity to make three others executed at later dates was not objectionable as being the result of an unwarranted compromise, where evidence referred to several different dates on which grantor allegedly became incapacitated and instructions of which no complaint was made authorized such a verdict.—Owings v. c. Quotient Verdicts or Averaging Estimates of Jurors

A verdict by jurors pursuant to an agreement to abide by the amount arrived at by adding the amounts which individual jurors think the plaintiff is entitled to and dividing by the number of jurors constitutes a quotient verdict which will be set aside.

In accordance with the rule that the verdict is vitiated if it is arrived at by chance or lot, it is generally held, although there is some authority to the contrary,¹⁹ that the verdict will be set aside as a quotient verdict if the jury, for the purpose of arriving at their verdict, agree that each member shall set down a sum which he thinks is right, that the aggregate will be divided by twelve, and that they will be bound by the result, whatever it may be, and the quotient returned as their verdict.²⁰ The test to be applied in determining the validity of the verdict which is attacked as a quotient verdict is whether the jury agreed beforehand to be bound by the result reached,²¹ since it is not the mere arriving at the average of the jurors opinions as to the amount of damage which makes the quotient verdict bad, but the vice consists in an agreement by the jurors to be bound by the result of the addition and division,²² thus allowing the quotient whatever it may be to stand without subsequent reconsideration.²³ It is sufficient to vitiate the verdict under this rule that only the greater number of the jurors entered into such an agreement;²⁴ and, even though there is no agreement, the verdict is vitiated if some of the jurors consider themselves bound to abide by the result of taking the average, and act accordingly.²⁵

If, however, there is no agreement that the average estimate shall be binding, and the averaging of estimates is done merely for the purpose of arriving at a working basis which the jurors are to be free to accept or reject as they see fit, a verdict, to which the jurors subsequently agree, is binding, whether it be for a sum which is the average of the amounts fixed by the individual jurors,²⁶ or whether the verdict agreed to by the

Chance verdict

Verdict rendered pursuant to jurors' agreement to accept one-twelfth of the aggregate amount of their several estimates is invalid as obtained by resort to chance or arrived at by lot.

Gambling verdict

Quotient verdict is a gambling verdict, one rendered pursuant to agreement, express or implied, to abide by the result of taking the average of various amounts of recovery suggested by each juror, no juror knowing what verdict he is to render, each being free to increase or decrease it by the figures he may name.

Quotient verdict distinguished from lottery verdict

In an action for wrongful death and pain and suffering of the deceased, alleged conduct of the jurors in setting down various amounts and dividing the total by 12, and apportioning the result one-third to the heir and two-thirds to the estate, gives rise only to a quotient verdict, as distinguished from a verdict by lottery.—Kennedy v. Griffin, 112 S.W.2d 644, 195 Ark. 379.

Implied agreement

(1) In challenging verdict as a quotient verdict, it is not necessary to show that agreement of jurors to arrive at such verdict was an express agreement, but such agreement may be implied.—Page v. Lockley, Civ. App., 176 S.W.2d 991, reversed on other grounds 180 S.W.2d 616, 142 Tex. 594.

(2) Quotient verdict implies an agreement in advance among jurors to accept one-twelfth of the aggregate amount of their several estimates as to what the verdict should be without the assent of their judgment to such a sum as their verdict.

jurors is for some other amount.²⁷ When there is nothing to show the contrary, it will be presumed that there was no illegal agreement to be bound by the average of the individual estimates;²⁸ and a verdict will not be vitiated as a quotient verdict if it does not affirmatively appear that the jurors bound themselves, in advance, to arrive at a verdict in that manner,²⁹ and that they in fact did so.³⁰ If the agreement to abide by the quotient verdict is repudiated, a verdict subsequently reached as the result of proper deliberation is valid;³¹ but the illegality of a quotient verdict cannot be cured by its subsequent adoption or ratification,³² or a subsequent agreement to a slightly different verdict;³³

if the agreement made in advance entered into or induced the result.

d. Averaging Estimates of Witnesses

It has been held proper, in estimating damages, for the jury to average the amounts testified to by the witnesses.

While there is some authority to the contrary,³⁴ it has been held not improper for the jury in estimating the damages to which plaintiff is entitled to average the amounts testified to by the witnesses,³⁵ but the striking of an average should not be resorted to without regard to the intelligence, capacity, and disinterestedness of the various witnesses.³⁶

D. COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN JUDGE AND JURY AND FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS AFTER SUBMISSION

§ 473. Communications between Judge and Jury

As a general rule all communications between the trial judge and the jury, after submission of the cause, must take place in open court and in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or their counsel.

Communications between the trial judge and jury after retirement of the jury should be controlled by a high degree of circumspection.³⁷ After retirement for deliberation the jury should not be disturbed or be recalled into court, except for compelling reasons to prevent a miscarriage of justice, until they are ready to render their verdict or other-

State v. Littlefield, Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 270, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Evidence held not to show quotient verdict

(1) The mere fact that verdict returned for plaintiff was one-fourth of amount sued for did not warrant conclusion that verdict was quotient verdict.—Tom Reed Gold Mines Co. v. Brady, 117 F.2d 484, 58 Ark. 44.

(2) Fact that each juror put down the amount of recovery which he thought was proper, and such amounts were added together and divided by twelve, thus obtaining an average which became the amount of the verdict rendered, did not render verdict liable to be set aside as a quotient verdict, in absence of any agreement beforehand on part of jurors to be bound by the amount which such process might produce.—Morrison v. Kansas City Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 263 P.2d 217, 175 Kan. 212.

(3) In action by husband and wife for damages sustained in collision

when rear end of their automobile was struck in intersection by truck driven by defendant's employee, fact that on piece of paper found in jury room after verdict for plaintiffs, one juror had written down 12 different amounts and added sums together and divided answer by 12 arriving at sum of four thousand one hundred twenty-five dollars, and that verdict rendered was four thousand dollars, did not show that verdict was a quotient verdict.—*Caraway v. wise to communicate with the trial judge to report their desire for further instructions or their inability to agree on a verdict or similar matters.³⁸ According to the rule generally adopted all communications between judge and jury, after submission of the cause, must take place in open court and in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or their counsel,³⁹ and statutes forbidding communications between the trial judge and jury except in open court have been held to be within the power of the legislature.⁴⁰ It is irregular for the trial court, therefore, to communicate further with the jury without the knowledge and consent or express stipulation of the parties or their counsel.⁴¹ A violation of this rule, it is often held, constitutes such misconduct as requires a reversal as a matter of law without regard to motive or whether there has been any prejudicial effect on the verdict;⁴² but there are a number of cases which have refused reversal on the ground that the improper communication could not possibly have been prejudicial in the particular case.⁴³

Inquiries as to state of deliberation

(1) The rule that the officer in charge of a jury shall not communicate with them or permit communication with the jury except to inquire if they have agreed on the verdict precludes the judge from knowing the state of the jury's deliberations before the verdict is returned into court.—Houston Electric Co. v. McLeroy, 163 S.W.2d 1062, 139 Tex. 170—Houston Electric Co. v. Lee, 162 S.W.2d 692, 139 Tex. 166—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Foreman, Civ.App., 236 S.W.2d 824, reversed on other grounds *Foreman v. (2) Where trial court in action for injuries inquired of jury on two different occasions, after jury had retired to deliberate verdict, concerning wishes of jury concerning lunch, and inquired late in evening as to whether jury thought they could reach verdict "this evening or tonight," such communications did not constitute error as being inquiries as to state of jury's deliberations.—Union City Transfer v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 248 S.W.2d 256, error refused no reversible error, certiorari denied 73 S.Ct. 834, 344 U.S. 912, 97 L.Ed. 703.

Communication between judge and individual juror

(1) Fact that juror, leaving fellow jurors and approaching trial judge in presence of counsel, stated jury were unable to agree and asked if case could be thrown out and was orally informed to find for plaintiff or defendants, was held reversible error.—Belser v. Achley, Tex.Civ.App., 67 S.W.2d 278.

(2) Rules of procedure providing for communication by jury with trial judge and for giving additional instructions are applicable by their terms only to communications between judge and jury as a body and not to communications between judge and a single juror.—Ross v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, Tex., 267 S.W.2d 541.

40. Matter of public concern

The sacredness of right to jury trial and delicacy of any fact inquiry as to probable effect of misconduct of trial court, before judge against whom complaint is made, render matter of such public concern as to be well within legislative right to enact statute forbidding trial judge to communicate with jury except in open court.—Prescott v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 821, error dismissed.

Interpretation of statute

The statute providing that after jurors retire to deliberate, if they disagree as to the testimony, or desire to be further informed on the law, they may request officer in charge to conduct them to the court, which shall give information sought on matters of law, and also, in presence of or after notice to parties or their counsel, may state its recollection of the testimony on a disputed point, should be interpreted broadly.—*Hubbuch v. (2) The receipt by trial court of a written note from jury foreman during trial of case, without disclosing in open court on request of counsel the contents of the note, was improper.—McBride v. Johns, 36 S.E.2d 822, 73 Ga.App. 444.

(3) Written communication between the jury who wrote trial judge a note inquiring whether jury could fix amount of judgment and the trial judge who answered the note by writing word "yes" on bottom of note and returning it to jury room was improper.—Finkel v. Otto Misch Co., 289 N.W. 276, 291 Mich. 630.

(4) Instruction that, if jury required further instructions, request should be put in writing and given to bailiff for delivery to court was a departure from the procedure prescribed by rules and called for a communication from jury prohibited by rules.—*Colls v. Although it was technically error for trial court to return jury to courtroom for purpose of answering foreman's question in absence of counsel, such action on part of court was not prejudicial, where court in answer to question did not give any new instructions but in substance merely directed jury's attention to instructions previously given.—City of Ok-

Where there is a substantial compliance with the requirement that the jury be brought into open court for communication with the judge no reversal is required.⁴⁴ A mere inquiry by the jury relating to the possible findings is not misconduct,⁴⁵ nor are verbal statements by the court to the jury in response to a request by the jury, when made with the consent of the parties.⁴⁶ Furthermore, there are cases which have held that the verdict will not be set aside where the communication is a mere collateral direction, which could not influence the jury in arriving at their verdict,⁴⁷ such as a direction on the manner of using the papers supplied for the reception of the verdict,⁴⁸ a direction with respect to the form of the verdict,⁴⁹ a direction to the bailiff to have the jury return in the morning after release for the night,⁵⁰ an answer to inquiries by the jury relating to the consideration of evidence by them,⁵¹ or a mere refusal to communicate.⁵²

Consent of counsel. Counsel may consent to communications between court and jury not made in open court,⁵³ and, if they do so, they may not thereafter object.⁵⁴ Some decisions require that this consent be affirmatively and expressly given,⁵⁵ and these courts refuse to infer consent from mere silence.⁵⁶ Other decisions, however, have held that consent may be implied where counsel are present or are informed and make no objection,⁵⁷ or, after making objection, counsel waive the error by failing to except to the action of the court in overruling the objection.⁵⁸ The judge's communications with the jury should be submitted to counsel in order to give them an opportunity to make objections thereto before they are delivered to the jury.⁵⁹

Correcting or explaining prior instructions

(1) Court may, on its own motion, recall jury for purpose of correcting previous instructions.—Monday v. Millisaps, Tenn.App., 264 S.W.2d 6.

(2) The statute providing that, when jury after retiring ask for further instructions, no charge shall be given except on the particular point ing to some authority, this power may be exercised, even though the jury say they do not want further instructions.⁶¹ Although the jury have returned in court and announced their agreement on a verdict, the court may, in order to correct some apparent error or oversight, send them out again with further instructions before receiving the verdict.⁶² The court is warranted in giving additional instructions to the jury when, after deliberation, they are unable to agree,⁶³ and where a defect in an improper verdict, once read, is noted by the court or timely brought to the attention of the court, it is the duty of the court to further instruct the jury before returning them for additional deliberation.⁶⁴

b. On Request of Jury

According to the rule generally adopted, the court may, at the request of the jury, give them further instructions after they have retired to deliberate, since the interests of justice require that the jury have full understanding of the case.

According to the rule generally adopted, the court may, at the request of the jury, give them further instructions after they have retired to deliberate,⁶⁵ since the interests of justice require that the jury have full understanding of the case,⁶⁶ and the court may, without the consent of counsel, recall the jury and give additional instructions although but one jurymen requests them.⁶⁷ Furthermore, it has been said that the trial court has the same right to instruct the jury when it returns for further instructions after having retired as before the jury retires for the first time.⁶⁸ No one but the court has authority to answer the questions or requests of the jury, and it is error to permit counsel to give his construction of a charge in response to a question of the jury as to its meaning.⁶⁹ Under a statute requiring that requests for on which they ask does not preclude the trial court in the exercise of sound discretion on its own motion or at the request of the parties or the jury from giving jury further instructions to correct or to explain instructions already given.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Carlisle, 161 S.W.2d 484, 138 Tex. 523, answer to certified question conformed to Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Carlisle, Civ. App., 162 S.W.2d 761.

Further instructions held not abuse of discretion

The giving of further instructions to jury in will contest was not abuse of discretion, where court called jury back after jury had considered case for more than four hours without reporting, and further instructed jury and shortly thereafter jury returned verdict for defendant.—Buck v. Robinson, 23 A.2d 157, 128 Conn. 376.

Without formal request

The custom of giving additional instructions is employed, as a usual thing, after the jury has deliberated for some time and are unable to agree, and the court need not await a formal request from the jury.—Hofrichter v. Klewit-Condon-Cunningham, 22 N.W.2d 703, 147 Neb. 224, 164 A.L.R. 1256.

Propriety of additional instructions

The propriety of additional instruction given when jurors reported their inability to agree should be determined on the basis of general views of policy as to what is desirable advice to be given jurors who seem to be unable to come to a decision.—Acunto v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 60 N.Y.S.2d 101, 270 App. Div. 385.

Unnecessary to give entire charge

The statute authorizing trial court to give the jury again the law applicable to the case when they return to the court room without having agreed does not require that the court repeat the entire charge if the jury request only some part of the charge dealing with a particular issue.—*Warmuth v. further instructions be made through the foreman of the jury, it is error for the judge to answer the request of a juror other than the foreman.⁷⁰

It has been held that it is not error to refuse to give a further instruction requested by the jury,⁷¹ or to answer a question by the jury or a juror,⁷² as where the giving of additional instructions would only serve to confuse the jury,⁷³ where the question was not concerned with substantive law,⁷⁴ where the jury requested an answer to a question which was in the province of the jury to answer,⁷⁵ or where the requested additional instruction was on an issue not presented by the pleadings or evidence.⁷⁶ It is not error for the court to refuse to comply with a general request further to read the law of the case which had already been read to the jury.⁷⁷ While the request may properly be refused, where there is a statute providing that no further instructions shall be given after the argument begins,⁷⁸ or where the request is for an instruction which could not properly be given,⁷⁹ it is usually said to be the duty of the court to give such additional instructions when requested,⁸⁰ and a prejudicial refusal to do so has been held reversible error.⁸¹

On the other hand, the mere indication by the jury of difficulty in reaching an agreement is not a request for additional instructions,⁸² and under a statute providing that the jury may require that they be conducted into open court where the information they seek must be given them in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or counsel, it is not mandatory on the court to give any information that the jury may request.⁸³ A jury request for further instructions may be waived,⁸⁴

(2) Where jury asked the court if they should consider named article in named document in rendering their verdict, even though such article was not ambiguous, court properly declined to give further instruction except that jury were exclusive judges of the facts, credibility of witnesses, and weight of testimony, since any other comment would have been on the weight to be given the evidence.—Reed v. as where the court, engaged in the trial of another case, did not immediately give the requested additional instructions and the jury announced their verdict shortly thereafter.⁸⁵

c. On Request of Counsel

Since error cannot ordinarily be assigned to the refusal of instructions unless timely requests are made, and requests are not timely if made after the jury have retired, it is generally held that, while the court may recall the jury and give them further instructions at the request of counsel, it may in its discretion refuse to do so.

Since error cannot ordinarily be assigned to the refusal of instructions unless timely requests are made, and requests are not timely if made after the jury have retired, it is generally held that, while the court may recall the jury and give them further instructions at the request of counsel,⁸⁶ it may in its discretion refuse to do so,⁸⁷ especially where the jury have already received all instructions necessary to aid them in reaching a verdict,⁸⁸ and no objections have been made to the instructions given,⁸⁹ or where the requested instruction is not supported by the evidence.⁹⁰ If, however, the instructions requested by counsel have previously been offered and improperly refused, error may be assigned to their refusal when the jury come into court for further instructions after retirement.⁹¹ It has also been held improper for the court to refuse a request to charge the jury that they could not agree to a verdict merely to escape

disagreement, where a statement of the foreman indicated that the jurors were confused on the subject and the verdict was apparently reached by compromise.⁹² Where the court has given additional instructions on its own motion or at the request of the jury, it is generally declared that the court should give additional, explanatory, or qualifying, instructions requested by counsel if the ends of justice so require.⁹³ This latter rule has no application if the court does not give new instructions to the jury, but the instructions originally given are simply repeated;⁹⁴ and, if further instructions have done no injury to the party complaining, the refusal of additional explanatory instructions requested by counsel is not ground for reversal.⁹⁵ Where the jury were not instructed on a necessary matter, it has been held error to refuse such an instruction submitted before the verdict is agreed on despite the initial omission by the party to request such an instruction.⁹⁶

tion;⁹⁸ and it may, in answer to a question of whether an instruction of a certain tenor has been given, state that it has.⁹⁹ Any reasonable request by the jury relating to the re-reading of instructions on a topic which is doubtful in the minds of the jury should not be willfully disregarded by the court.¹ Where the jury return a verdict not authorized by the instructions, re-reading of the instructions by the court preliminary to sending the jury out to return another verdict is not improper.²

It is, however, error for the court, without request therefor, to single out and reread and emphasize only one instruction,³ or to have reread only one instruction when the reading of another instruction is also necessary completely to present to the jury the law covering the matter as to which they are in doubt.⁴ Where the jury request an additional charge, the trial judge need not reread or give his entire charge, but need charge only such parts thereof as are necessary to answer the request,⁵ and, thus an individual instruction may be repeated where only it is requested by the jury,⁶ although even in such a case the judge should caution the jury that all the law of the case is not contained in the particular instruction and that it covers only a particular phase of the case.⁷

tions in connection with the supplemental instructions, or it may simply give additional instructions.¹¹ During the receipt of additional instructions statements by jurors indicating a possible misapprehension of instructions do not of themselves make the instructions erroneous.¹² A trial judge's repetition of language in the jury's note requesting additional instructions has been held not prejudicial as resulting in undue emphasis with respect to the note.¹³

Generally, any instruction which would have been proper in the first charge may be given as a supplemental instruction to a jury deliberating on a verdict.¹⁴ Additional instructions should not result in the court invading the province of the jury,¹⁵ nor should the instructions permit the jury to go beyond their province.¹⁶ Where supplemental instructions are found necessary and are given by the court, the failure to instruct originally on the point has been held not error.¹⁷ Incorrect instructions given in the original charge should be corrected on a resubmission of the case,¹⁸ and an agreement by counsel at the time of the original charge that the jury might consider the case without a correction of the charge is not binding on the resubmission.¹⁹ On a rereading of particular testimony requested by the jury, a statement by the court that there were other witnesses whose testimony in some parts was in conflict with the testimony read has been held not erroneous on the ground of no clear conflict where the testimony was not all one way and the statement was construed as merely cautionary.²⁰ Additional instructions which leave an incorrect impression as to the burden of proof are improper.²¹

As is the case with instructions originally given, additional instructions should not ignore or exclude from the consideration of the jury material issues covered by the instructions originally given.²² So also, the supplemental charge should be limited to issues on which there is proof,²³ or to issues which

Question of costs

Apportionment of damages

Where jury returned to court room after they had retired to consider the case and inquired whether jury should apportion damages between the three defendants involved in automobile collision, trial court properly instructed jury that if jury awarded damages, verdict should be that jury found for plaintiff against defendants or any combination of the defendants and assessed amount of damages at whatever amount jury determined.—Watt v. Unsettled issue

In action for wrongfully entering on lands and removing timber therefrom, where plaintiffs claimed title to part of land overlapping defendants', the larger part of overlap by virtue of adverse possession and the smaller by prior patent, and defendants claimed the larger portion by virtue of prior patent and the smaller by agreement, court's answer to questions of jury concerning how much timber had been cut on plaintiffs' land, that largest amount was on the older patent, was equivalent to saying that the senior patent settled the question, and answer that court did not consider the agreement to have settled title, were error.—Nolan v. Limiting jury to issue

Where only one question of negligence was submitted to jury in special verdict as to each party to action and that was whether at or just before collision his vehicle was being operated on wrong side of street, and jury inquired whether they could find that both plaintiff and defendant's truck driver were guilty of negligence in operating their vehicles on wrong side of street, instruction that jury would have to answer one question "yes" and one "no" was proper.—

are tendered by the pleadings,²⁴ and it has been held that after submission of the cause an additional instruction should not be given which goes so far as to be another full, complete, and different charge on any of the material questions involved in the issues of the case.²⁵ Although categorical answers may properly be given without reinstruction or elaboration,²⁶ the court may,²⁷ and should,²⁸ where it appears that more than a categorical answer is necessary to keep the issues to be decided correctly before the minds of the jury, give instructions beyond those necessary directly to answer the questions or requests of the jury; but, in answering the jury's request for further instructions, it is not necessary for the court again to charge them on all the elements in the case.²⁹

While it is error to give an unresponsive answer to the jury's request for further instructions which tends to confuse the jury,³⁰ the court need not test the meaning of a jury's inquiry for further instructions by strict rules of construction,³¹ but may consider and answer the question according to the meaning obviously intended.³² If a further instruction adequately deals with the only material point in the case, it will be presumed that it fully answered the jury's request for further instructions, if it is not affirmatively made to appear that the jury sought instruction on some other point.³³ The fact that the court misunderstands the request of the jury and gives an unresponsive answer will not be considered as an erroneous refusal to answer the request where the complaining party fails to call the attention of the court to the matter so as to give an opportunity to correct the misapprehension;³⁴ and an unresponsive answer to the jury's inquiry is not improper where the question cannot properly be answered directly without injecting into the case an issue not raised by the parties.³⁵

Necessity that instructions be written or made part of record. Where instructions are required to be given in writing or made part of the record, and further instructions are given, these instructions must also be in writing,³⁶ or reported and recorded by the court stenographer,³⁷ unless, as may be done, this requirement is waived.³⁸ Statutes requiring further or additional instructions to be in writing do not apply to all statements made by the court to the jury after submission of the cause.³⁹

Material alteration

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision, instruction, in response to request by jury, which permitted jury to answer issue as to time when brakes were first applied and also as to time of actual collision, whereas issue as originally submitted required but a single answer, was error as a material alteration in the nature of an unauthorized general charge.—Carter v. Failure to comply held error

Where written instructions had not been waived or oral instructions consented to and main charge to jury was in writing, giving further instructions orally at request of jury after retirement and not in the presence of the parties or counsel constituted error, regardless of whether counsel for both parties had agreed that further instructions might be given in their absence, particularly where record failed to disclose compliance with statutory requirement that oral instructions be taken down by court reporter and typewritten at length.—Ackerman v. Presentment or submission to attorneys. A statute requiring that the original instructions be submitted to counsel on both sides before being read to the jury has been held to have no application to additional instructions given after submission of the case;⁴⁰ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴¹ Where the additional instructions were submitted to, and approved by, the attorneys, the instructions have been held proper.⁴²

§ 478. — Necessity That Instructions be Given in Open Court and in Presence of Counsel or Parties

In accordance with the general rule that all communications between court and jury must be in open court, additional or supplemental instructions should be so given, unless counsel agree otherwise; however, there is a split of authority as to the necessity for the presence of counsel in the court and the necessity for making an attempt to secure their presence.

court, additional or supplemental instructions should be given in such manner,⁴³ unless counsel agree otherwise.⁴⁴ Consequently, it is generally held that, if counsel have not consented thereto, it is improper for the judge, in the absence of counsel, to go into the jury room and give further instructions,⁴⁵ or to send the further instructions to the jury room with another.⁴⁶ According to some cases, however, error in failing to give the instructions in open court is not ground for reversal if it is apparent that no prejudice resulted;⁴⁷ but there is clearly ground for reversal if there is any uncertainty as to the contents of instructions privately communicated to the jury.⁴⁸

With respect to the necessity for the presence of counsel, the rule sustained by one line of decisions is to the effect that, if the further instructions are given in open court, it is not error to give them in the absence of counsel and without making an attempt to secure their presence.⁴⁹ However, in

Where issues not defined

A verdict-urging instruction did not define the issues in the case so that it was required to be in writing, where the court simply repeated what issues the jury were required to decide as they were set forth in the written instructions, and the instruction was simply a cautionary instruction for the jury to agree if the jury could properly do so.—In re Cocklin's Estate, 5 N.W.2d 577, 232 Iowa 266.

Oral instruction on maximum counsel fee

In action against railroad for injuries under Federal Employers' Liability Act, trial court properly orally answered inquiry addressed to court by jury after jury had retired to deliberate as to what the maximum fee or percentage basis allowed by the law to plaintiff's counsel was.—Counts v. Thompson, 222 S.W.2d 487, 359 Mo. 485.

Admonitory instructions

An oral remark by court to jury, that they should wholly disregard the statements made to them by one who had intruded in the jury room, was not a violation of the statute requiring further instructions to the jury to be given in writing, since it was merely admonitory and a reiteration of instructions already given to determine issues solely from evidence introduced.—Bell v. New Jersey Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 610.

Advice on juror's attitude

Abstract advice by trial court after case was submitted to jury concerning proper and improper mental attitude for a juror to assume toward a matter submitted to be acted on by him which did not touch on material matters in issue was not within purview of statute requiring all instructions to be written and submitted to counsel on each side.—Lennox, by Rose v. White, 54 S.E.2d 8, 133 W.Va. 1, 25 A.L.R.2d 437.

Same formality as original instructions

Where additional instructions are given to a jury after the jury have deliberated for some time and are unable to agree, the jury should be brought before the court in a body, and the additional instruction should be given with the same formality as the original instructions.—*Hofrichter v. a considerable number of jurisdictions it is well settled, sometimes by statute⁵⁰ or rule of practice,⁵¹ that it is error to give further instructions in the absence of, or without notice to, the parties or their counsel.⁵² This latter rule is usually held not to apply if a reasonable attempt has been made to notify counsel or procure their attendance,⁵³ if an attempt to procure their attendance would be impracticable,⁵⁴ if the right to be present is waived by counsel voluntarily absents themselves from the

Charge after separation for night

Verdict was irregular where, after sealed verdict had been ordered and jury were permitted to separate for night after they had disagreed, court further charged jury on following morning in absence of defendant and his counsel.—Schattner v. Heriman, 285 N.Y.S. 343, 247 App.Div. 730.

Waiver by parties of right to be present when verdict was taken could not be construed to authorize trial judge, in absence of the parties and their counsel and without notice to them, to send instructions in writing to the jury pursuant to inquiry by them after they had retired from courtroom and while they were in jury room deliberating on their verdict.—Arrington v. Robertson, C.C.A. Pa., 114 F.2d 821.

Counsel's responsibility to be in attendance

Where jury retired and agreed on verdict for plaintiff, but returned into court to inquire whether they should themselves compute the interest, and the court after directing clerk to make a search for defendant's counsel learned that he had left the courtroom, failure to wait until presence of defendant's counsel should be obtained, before instructing jury that they should compute the interest if interest was to be allowed, was not error, since it was counsel's primary responsibility to be in attendance until the case was concluded.—Meyer v. Dubinsky Realty Co., Mo.App., 133 S.W.2d 1106.

Delaying progress of trial

Where counsel is voluntarily absent from courtroom when jury inquires about answering questions submitted to them, he waives his right to be present, and it is not incumbent on court to delay progress of trial until counsel can be located and advised of the answers returned before instruction to answer all questions is given.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Gideon, Tex.Civ.App., 213 S.W.2d 848.

Noise in jury room

Recalling jury after retirement, on hearing noise in jury room, to admonish jury that their deliberations should be orderly, was held proper, although neither litigants nor counsel were present.—Silverstein v. Schneider, 164 A. 480, 110 N.J.Law 239.

jury's inquiry as to whether any of the testimony of a certain witness had been stricken,⁶¹ are not instructions on any point of law within the meaning of a statute requiring instructions on any point of law to be given in the presence of, or after notice to, the parties or their counsel.

E. RESTATING EVIDENCE AND READING MINUTES OF TESTIMONY OR ALLEGATIONS OF PLEADINGS TO JURY

It is generally held, sometimes under statutory authority, that where the jury after retirement return to the court with a request for information as to which they are in doubt, the trial court may, in its discretion, permit the jury to rehear the testimony of a witness, or have the notes or minutes of the evidence on that point read to the jury, or recapitulate the testimony.

The trial court may, in its discretion, permit the court stenographer to read excerpts from the evidence to the jury before they retire;⁶² and where counsel for a party, in his argument to the jury, makes an erroneous assertion as to what a witness has testified to, it is error for the court to refuse opposing counsel's request to have the testimony of that witness read to the jury.⁶³ While there is some authority to the effect that notes or minutes of the evidence cannot be read to the jury, after they have retired,⁶⁴ unless with the consent, or at the request, of the parties,⁶⁵ it is generally held, sometimes under statutory authority,⁶⁶ that, where the jury after retirement return to court with a request for information as to the evidence on an important point as to which they are in doubt, the trial court may, in its discretion, permit the jury to rehear the testimony of a witness,⁶⁷ or have the notes or minutes of the evidence on that point read to the jury,⁶⁸ or recapitulate the testimony,⁶⁹ even with-

Application to depositions

Under statute providing that, if disagreement arises between the jurors as to any part of the "testimony," the court may give jurors its recollection thereon or cause stenographer to read from the record after notice to parties or their counsel, quoted word includes testimony given by deposition.—Wilson v. Oklahoma Ry. Co., 248 P.2d 1014, 207 Okl. 204.

Statute to be interpreted broadly

The statute providing that after jurors retire to deliberate, if they disagree as to the testimony, they may request officer in charge to conduct them to the court, which shall give information sought on matters of law, and also, in presence of, or after notice to, parties or their counsel, may state its recollection of the testimony on a disputed point, should be interpreted broadly.—Hubbuck v. Discretion

(1) Whether jury, after retirement, may, on their request, have particular portion of evidence read to them, is within discretion of trial court.—Nixon v. Shaver, 176 S.E. 849, 115 W. Va. 469.

(2) Where all parties and attorneys were present when jury requested that testimony be reviewed but record did not show that either of the parties consented or objected to the request, trial court was not required to grant the jury's request and require the reporter to read the testimony.—Small v. Wegner, Mo., 267 S.W.2d 26.

Practice not to be encouraged

The practice of allowing an official stenographer to read to jury his notes of the testimony of a witness, on request made by a jury which is allegedly in disagreement as to such witness' testimony, should not be encouraged.—Shiers v. Cowgill, 59 N.W. 2d 407, 157 Neb. 265.

69. Mo.—Wallrath v. Bohnenkamp, 70 S.W. 1112, 97 Mo.App. 242.

64 C.J. p 1045 note 35.

Judge's recollection or transcript

(1) If the judge has a clear recollection of the testimony in dispute he may, on request of the jury, give it to them orally from the bench, the stenographer at the same time taking down what is said in shorthand, but if he does not desire or is not in a position to follow that course he should require the stenographer to furnish him with a transcript of the testimony in dispute duly certified as correct and thus he must read to the jury.—Pilgeram v. Haas, 167 P.2d 339, 118 Mont. 431.

(2) Where jury, in disagreement over testimony of a witness, requested the testimony of such witness, whether judge would recollect testimony for jury or would direct official stenographic reporter to read such testimony was matter within discretion of trial court.—Shiers v. Cowgill, 59 N.W.2d 407, 157 Neb. 265.

(3) The reading by the official reporter of testimony of a witness examined on the trial is within spirit if not within letter of statute authorizing jury to request to be taken to court where court may give its recollection as to testimony about which jury is in disagreement, since stenographic reporter's notes of the testimony are likely to be more accurate than judge's recollection of what was testified to.—Shiers v. Cowgill, supra.

(4) In action on contract, refusal to read to jury, after retirement, portion of testimony requested was held not error, where court gave instructions on its own recollection of the

Testimony should not be read, however, merely because the jurors desire to have their memory refreshed.⁷¹ If there is no statute requiring it to be given, the court may, in its discretion, properly refuse the jury's request for information as to the evidence,⁷² although it has been held that a denial of a proper request for a rereading of testimony is error.⁷³

While it is not error for the court, on its own motion, to have read the testimony of another witness on the same point after the reading of the particular testimony requested by the jury is completed,⁷⁴ and it is said to be the better practice to have all the evidence on a point stated,⁷⁵ the court, if it does not abuse its discretion, may state or have read only part of the testimony on a given point;⁷⁶ and it has been held that the court may have the direct testimony of the witness read, and at the same time refuse to have the testimony on cross-examination read as requested by counsel,⁷⁷ or may properly order the reading of the evidence discontinued when the jury announce that they have heard all they desire;⁷⁸ and the testimony of the witness on the point with which the jury are concerned may be read without reading the entire testimony of the witness.⁷⁹ It has been held not an abuse of discretion for the court, where the jury, at their request and that of counsel, are brought in to hear the testimony of several witnesses read, to have the testimony of only one witness read and then state the substance of the testimony of the remaining witnesses.⁸⁰

Reading allegations of pleadings. It is not error for the judge to read, at a juror's request, the allegations of the complaint relating to the amount of damages claimed where the judge at the same time advises the jury that such allegations are denied.⁸¹

§ 480. Necessity for Presence of Counsel

Although there is authority to the contrary, the rule generally formulated is that evidence should be read or restated only in the presence of, or after notice to, counsel.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁸² the rule generally formulated, sometimes by virtue of statute,⁸³ is that the evidence should be read or restated only in the presence of, or after notice to, counsel;⁸⁴ and noncompliance with this rule is reversible error,⁸⁵ unless it is clear that a correct verdict was rendered and no prejudice resulted.⁸⁶

Evident confusion of jurors
Where jurors, after deliberating for about two hours, in an unusual accident case involving novel issues and resulting in evident uncertainty and confusion as to facts, asked to have reread plaintiff's testimony and testimony of a defendant, denial of request was error.—*Kerner v. F. URGING OR COERCING AGREEMENT AND DISCHARGE OF JURY FOR FAILURE TO AGREE

§ 481. Urging or Coercing Agreement

- a. In general
- b. Statements or acts regarded as proper and noncoercive
- c. Coercive or improper statements or acts

a. In General

When the jury are unable to agree on a verdict, it is within the discretionary power of the trial court to urge them to make an earnest effort to agree; however, it is well settled that they must be left free to act without any real or seeming coercion on the part of the court.

When the jury are unable to agree on a verdict, it is within the discretionary power of the trial court to urge them to make an earnest effort to agree.⁸⁷ Especially may this be done where, from the character of the issues and the evidence, there can be little toleration of obvious and unreasonable obstruction to an agreement.⁸⁸ However, while the jury may be urged to agree, it is now well settled that they must be left free to act without any real or seeming coercion on the part of the court,⁸⁹ or to feel that should they continue to disagree, they are not to be exposed to unreasonable inconvenience or to receive the animadversion of the court.⁹⁰

What amounts to improper coercion of a verdict by a trial court necessarily depends to a great extent on the facts and circumstances of the particular case and cannot be determined by any general or definite rule.⁹¹ The ultimate test to determine whether verdict-urging instructions are erroneous is whether they force or help to force an agreement, or whether they merely start a new train of real deliberation ending the disagreement.⁹² In urging the jury to agree on a verdict, the court should emphasize that it is not endeavoring to inject its ideas into the minds of the jurors and that by such instruction the court does not intend that any juror should surrender his own free will and judgment,⁹³ and these ideas should be couched in language readily understood by the ordinary lay juror.⁹⁴ It is universally held to be error for the court, by words or acts, to threaten or attempt to coerce the jurors for the purpose of compelling them to render a verdict,⁹⁵ although in early times coercive measures appear to have been resorted to in order to compel agreement.⁹⁶

Coercive statements or remarks will vitiate the verdict where it appears probable that the jury were improperly influenced;⁹⁷ but there will be no re-

A court may use reasonable methods to bring about a verdict founded on conscientious conviction, and, in a proper manner, impress on jurors their duty to render such a verdict, but the methods of the court must not take the character of a mandate, with penalties of both moral and physical suffering for disobedience—Welshire v. Bruaw, 200 A. 67, 331 Pa. 392.

A court should not unduly press a jury to agree on a verdict, and in the use of any remarks designed to impress the desirability of reaching a verdict, the court should be careful to refrain from any expression of a coercive nature, or of a nature which might possibly mislead the jury into an erroneous method of reaching a verdict—Gaddy v. Harmon, 13 S.E.2d 357, 191 Ga. 563—Alabama Great Southern Ry. Co. v. Daffron, 71 S.E. 799, 136 Ga. 555.

- N.Y.—Wilkins v. Abbey, 5 N.Y.S.2d 826, 168 Misc. 416.

At common law, the custom was to leave the jury without food until they agreed, thus starving them into submission—Hart Bros. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 82 P.2d 221, 31 Cal. App.2d Supp. 766.

97. N.J.—In re Stern, 95 A.2d 593, 11 N.J. 584.
- 64 C.J. p 1047 note 59.

By subordinate officer

(1) Coercion or pressure applied on a jury by a subordinate officer of the court will invalidate the verdict where natural tendency of such misconduct is to influence the jury in their deliberations—Wilkins v. Abbey, 5 N.Y.S.2d 826, 168 Misc. 416.

(2) A tipstaff who is in charge of jury should not, without instructions from court, ask jurors how they stand, or make any remark whatever concerning their deliberations—Welshire v. Bruaw, 200 A. 67, 331 Pa. 392.

versal where the evidence is of such character that the court might take the case from the jury and direct a verdict.⁹⁸ The fact that the jury return with a verdict within a short while after being properly urged to agree by the court has no more tendency to show that something improper was said by the court than that the jury's previous inability to agree has been due to giving the case due and thorough deliberation.⁹⁹

Urging jury to hasten verdict. If no prejudice appears probable, it is not reversible error because the court directs the jury to hasten in reaching their verdict,¹ although remarks and admonitions such as will unduly hasten them in arriving at a verdict are improper.²

Time allowed to jury to deliberate. The period of time which shall be permitted to elapse before the jury are recalled and urged to agree rests largely in the discretion of the trial court which will not be interfered with if the time allowed the jury to deliberate is not unreasonably short.³ Thus, permitting a jury to deliberate for a period of time is not improper as coercive merely because the period of deliberation is lengthy,⁴ especially where the issues are complicated and the testimony voluminous.⁵

Withdrawal of coercive remarks. Where remarks, which might be construed as of a coercive nature, are explicitly withdrawn, there is no available error.⁶

b. Statements or Acts Regarded as Proper and Noncoercive

Many statements by the court urging agreement have been held proper, including statements as to the desirability or importance of agreement, and that it is the duty of jurors to argue with each other, listen to each other, and reconcile differences of opinion, if they can conscientiously do so.

Preliminary to urging the jury to agree the court may properly inquire of them the reasons for their failure to agree,⁷ and ask them if there is a probability of their agreeing,⁸ and in what proportion they are divided.⁹ The court may properly suggest

Where jury in personal injury action had been in deliberation for over three and one-half hours at time judge recalled them to courtroom in presence of counsel for both parties and stated that he did not wish jurors to state how they presently stood or why, but merely to reply whether they believed if given further time they would be able to agree on verdict, and consensus was that if given further time verdict could be agreed on, interrogation of jury for such purpose and return of jury for further deliberation disclosed no abuse of discretion.—Hoffman v. Usual practice

Usual practice is for court to ask jury collectively whether they can probably agree on verdict, looking to foreman to answer for jury.—Foreman v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, 241 S.W.2d 977, 150 Tex. 468, conformed to Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Foreman, Civ.App., 262 S.W.2d 248.

the desirability¹⁰ or importance¹¹ of the jury reaching an agreement on a verdict, and state that it will send them back to reconsider the case and see if they can reach a verdict,¹² and in its discretion the court may in fact send the jury back,¹³ even repeatedly,¹⁴ for additional deliberation after they have reported their inability to agree. The court may properly inform the jury what percentage of them may bring in a verdict after the prescribed deliberation.¹⁵

proper and not coercive.¹⁶ In urging them to agree the court may properly advise the jury that, while they should not surrender any conscientious opinion founded on the evidence,¹⁷ it is their duty to argue with each other, listen to each other, reconcile their differences of opinion, and reach an agreement if they can conscientiously do so;¹⁸ that they should lay aside all pride of judgment;¹⁹ that each juror should reexamine for himself the grounds of his opinion;²⁰ and that they should consider their differences in a spirit of fairness and candor,²¹ with

(1) In processioning proceedings wherein three hours after jury retired court inquired of jury whether it was a question of law or fact which prevented their returning a verdict, and foreman replied that it seemed impossible that they would get together and judge remarked "I am going to let you gentlemen go out and see if you can't make a verdict," trial court did not abuse its discretion.—Davis v. Act of trial court in ordering jury to continue deliberation and telling them that some jurors stayed until midnight after foreman advised court that they were in disagreement, and that one of lady jurors was ill, was not improper as coercing a verdict, where jury had deliberated for only one hour and court specifically gave lady juror opportunity, if able, to try further deliberation but to report to court if she felt too ill to continue, and where all jurors joined in the verdict—*Petrarca v. (1) In death action wherein jury retired at about 11 o'clock at night and at one o'clock in the morning the court caused jury to return to the courtroom, colloquy between the court which informed jurors that they might go to bailiff's house to sleep and have breakfast and a juror who stated that the majority would rather sit up and consider the case, and action of trial court in allowing jury, which at the time stood 11 to 1 for the plaintiff, to do so, and to return verdict for plaintiff at four o'clock in the morning did not constitute error.—Atlanta, B. & C. an honest desire to arrive at the truth and with the view of arriving at a verdict.²²

The court may also remind the jury that they took an oath to hear and determine the issues fairly and impartially, that the jury should approach the subject without bias or sympathy, and that it is their duty to decide the case fairly on the evidence and law.²³ Although there are cases which display a tendency strictly to limit the extent to which such suggestions can go,²⁴ it is often held that, if the jury are cautioned that they need not surrender their conscientious convictions, it is proper for the court to advance suggestions to the effect that, if a minority differ in their views from a large number of their fellows, such difference of opinion should induce the minority to doubt the correctness of their judgment and lead them to reconsider and re-examine the basis for their judgment to determine whether or not they have been mistaken.²⁵ As reasons for agreeing the jury may properly be reminded of the expense of a disagreement to the state or county,²⁶ or to the parties,²⁷ or that the jury's services are needed in other cases.²⁸ So also, the jury may be reminded of the number of times the case has been on trial,²⁹ the length of

Records of previous juries as to agreements may properly be referred to,³⁵ and it is not error to state that there have been no mistrials since the beginning of the trial judge's administration.³⁶ It is not coercion for the court to inform the jury that their verdict must be unanimous.³⁷ An instruction that if the evidence does not show that the party having the affirmative of the issue is entitled to the verdict the jury must find against that party is not coercive or erroneous as a direction to the jury that, if as a body they could not agree on a verdict in favor of the party having the affirmative, they should all unite in a verdict for the other party.³⁸ It is not coercive to jurors, unable to reconcile conflicting testimony, for the court to state that the jury can find a verdict according to the preponderance of the evidence and that if they

In telling a jury of their duty to agree, the court must be careful not unduly to impress such duty on them so that they are likely to surrender their conscientious convictions, and thus they must not be censured, ridiculed, or threatened.

Where a supplementary instruction to the jury has a natural tendency to interfere with their exercise of unfettered and unbiased judgment by means of illusory consideration or overemphasis of an extraneous factor and the response is immediate, the inference of false direction and undue influence is entirely reasonable, if not irresistible.⁴⁰ In telling the jury of their duty to agree, the court must be careful not unduly to impress such duty on them so that they are likely to surrender their conscientious convictions.⁴¹ The jury must not be censured,⁴² ridiculed,⁴³ or threatened with punishment or hardship⁴⁴ for not coming to an agreement.

It is error for the court to suggest to the jury, as an inducement to agree, that plaintiff is a poor man,⁴⁵ or to go so far as to advise a verdict for one party or the other.⁴⁶ To minimize the importance of the case on trial, as a reason for agreeing,⁴⁷ or to give the jury the impression that it is immaterial whether they arrive at a right or wrong verdict, by telling them that the appellate court will correct the verdict if it is wrong,⁴⁸ is error. Statements to the effect that the purpose of the trial is to secure a verdict and that the labors of the court and the entire proceedings will be wasted if a verdict is not reached are coercive in nature and erroneous.⁴⁹ It is error for the court, in urging the jury to agree, to tell them that if they necessitated a retrial the suit must be tried on the same pleadings and evidence and that a disagreement would simply add to the burden of the successful party.⁵⁰

(1) Oral instruction to deliberating jury after court had learned from jury that they stood eleven to one, urging jury to get together and criticizing one juror for position he was taking, although such juror was not named or designated, was coercive and erroneous.—Moore v. Owens, 56 P.2d 86, 143 Kan. 620.

(2) Instruction to deliberating jury that there was little excuse for hung jury, that such situation generally arose out of personal quarrels or differences between jurors, and that it was an abomination to any court, an abhorrence to taxpayers, and a reproach on the members of the jury was coercive.—Neely v. (3) Where jurors in automobile collision case conferred with court three times and were unable to agree and again reassembled after having had case approximately two days and stated they were still unable to agree and court told jury among other things, that they had not approached the subject with right disposition, that a person who says "you never can convince me" cannot be fit for jury service and "you have to be convinced or you can't agree," and to try again, and jury the next morning returned verdict of no cause of action, purport of court's statements was that it was juror's duty to agree.—Decker v. Statements held not coercive

(1) Trial court did not coerce jury into a verdict by stating that when they reached a verdict they could separate for the night and return the next morning to hear the verdict read, and in response to juror's question with respect to the eventuality that no verdict was reached by the next morning, that they should "still be there," and that after twelve hours' deliberation a five-sixths' verdict might be reached, where verdict was not returned until the afternoon of the following day.—In re Os-

considered improper for the court, in case of disagreement, to tell the jury that, if they do not agree, they will be confined for a specified length of time⁵² or until they reach an agreement.⁵³ Improper statements of this character are sometimes held not ground for reversal,⁵⁴ especially if it appears that the jury were not hastened into reaching an agreement by the statement;⁵⁵ but there are decisions to the effect that such statements will vitiate the verdict without regard to whether the verdict was improperly influenced thereby,⁵⁶ and others hold that there will be a reversal where it reasonably and satisfactorily appears that the jury were influenced by the improper statements,⁵⁷ or where there is doubt as to whether or not the jury were influenced.⁵⁸

Threats as to, and deprivation of, food, rest, and comfort. For the judge so arbitrarily to order the jury locked up without food until they should agree, that they might well understand from the order that they were required either to agree or to submit to indefinite confinement and starvation,⁵⁹ or to tell the jury that they will be confined for a specified period with only one meal a day until they agree,⁶⁰ or to state they can have no food except at their own expense,⁶¹ or to state that if jurors did not soon agree they would suffer from discomfort or cold by reason of the heat being turned off from the building,⁶² constitutes coercion requiring a reversal. It is not reversible error for the court to send the jury back for further deliberation after their report of a disagreement and announcement that they were "awful hungry" and would like to get off "some way or other," where on a second report of a disability to agree the jury were allowed to dine and thereafter deliberated and agreed.⁶³ Locking a jury up under circumstances in which they might reasonably understand that they are to be confined over a long period of time unless they reach a verdict is improper,⁶⁴ and under a statute requiring the jury to be given a specified amount of rest during their deliberations, it is error to let the jury deliberate, without rest, late into the night and beyond the time prescribed by statute, and without telling them of their statutory rights, until some of the jurors are so tired in mind and body that they yield their views simply for the sake of a verdict;⁶⁵ but, in the absence of statute, the fact that the jurors are required to deliberate for a considerable length of time without opportunity for rest is not ground for reversal where the conduct of the jury is such as to indicate that they prefer to remain at work until a verdict has been reached.⁶⁶

§ 482. Discharge for Failure to Agree

The length of time which the jury are to be kept together before they are finally discharged as unable to agree on a verdict rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.

The court, in its discretion, may and should require the jury to remain together and deliberate for a reasonable length of time in an effort to reach an agreement, as discussed supra § 462, but when fully satisfied that the jury cannot agree, the court has power to discharge them from the case.⁶⁷ The length of time which the jury are to be kept together, before they are finally discharged as unable to agree on a verdict, rests largely in the discretion of the trial judge,⁶⁸ who may consider the importance of the case, the expense of a retrial, and the possibility of the jury reaching a verdict.⁶⁹ The jury should be discharged when they fail to agree on a material issue,⁷⁰ but their failure to agree on an immaterial issue is not ground for discharging them for inability to agree.⁷¹ Under a statute providing that, if a jury return a second time without having agreed on a verdict, they shall not be sent out again without their own consent unless they shall ask from the court some further explanation of the law, a jury returning a second time after the judge has left the courtroom should be discharged,⁷² and the court may properly consider the testimony or affidavit of the bailiff that the jury had for the second time been unable to reach a verdict.⁷³

The power of the court to determine when the jury shall be discharged for failure to agree is judicial,⁷⁴ and cannot be delegated to the clerk of court.⁷⁵ After the jury have been discharged for failure to agree the case is terminated with no issue determined and stands as if no trial had been had,⁷⁶ and it is ready for retrial immediately or at a future time as directed by the court.⁷⁷ The jury no longer have charge of, or power over, the case,⁷⁸ and they cannot thereafter reassemble and agree on a verdict.⁷⁹ It has been held, however, that although the jury have been ordered discharged, they may still render a verdict if they have not separated and left the court room and their discharge has not been recorded;⁸⁰ and where the court has directed the officer in charge to discharge the jury at a certain hour if they have not agreed by that time, the failure of the officer to observe this direction does not invalidate a verdict, accepted by the court, although agreed to after deliberations which have continued beyond the time specified for the discharge.⁸¹

G. OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

§ 483. Necessity; Effect of Failure to Object or Except

As a general rule, if a party obtains knowledge during the progress of the trial of acts of jurors, or acts affecting them, which he shall wish to urge as objections to the verdict, he must object at once, or as soon as the opportunity is presented, or be considered as having waived his objections.

While it has been held otherwise where misconduct of the prevailing party is involved,⁸² as a general rule, if a party obtains knowledge during the progress of the trial of acts of or affecting jurors, which he shall wish to urge as objections to the verdict, he must object at once, or as soon as the opportunity is presented, or be considered as having waived his right to object,⁸³ and the trial judge may, in his discretion, refuse to hear evidence on the charge after a verdict has been rendered.⁸⁴

§ 484. Sufficiency of Objection or Exception

Where the irregularity is merely called to the attention of the court without any objection thereto, such procedure is insufficient, and it is not incumbent on the court to take action with respect thereto unless requested to do so.

Where the irregularity is merely called to the attention of the court without any objection thereto, such procedure is insufficient, and it is not incumbent on the court on its own motion to discharge the jury or to take any action with respect thereto unless requested to do so.⁵ An exception to an instruction which states that the jury will receive the pleadings with the instructions is a sufficient exception or objection to the act of sending the pleadings to the jury.⁶ The fact that counsel for the complaining party simply states to the court, when counsel for the other party is handing the jury a paper to take with them, that he wants the court to understand that he is not consenting to the paper being sent, is not a sufficient exception to the sending of the paper.⁷ The making of a motion asking for a discharge of the jury and that a mistrial be declared, immediately after the court gave an erroneous instruction to a deliberating jury, has been held sufficient to bring the matter to the attention of the trial court and to answer the purpose of a formal objection.⁸

A verdict is the answer of the jury concerning any matter of fact, in any cause committed to them for trial; its object is to announce to the court the judgment of the jury as to how far the facts established by the evidence conform to those which are alleged and put in issue by the pleadings.

A verdict is the answer of the jury concerning any matter of fact, in any cause committed to them for trial,⁹ and whatever they find beyond this is

Verdict as essential to judgment see Judgments § 45.

Equivalent to judgment

Verdict is equivalent to a judgment or final determination.—Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. J. R. Clark Co., Minn., 59 N.W.2d 899, applying Missouri law.

"General verdict" defined see infra subdivision b of this section.

In Pennsylvania

With respect to jury trials in civil actions, the established practice admits of only three forms of verdict, general verdict, general verdict with special findings or answers to special questions of fact, and special verdict.—Fulforth v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 24 A.2d 749, 147 Pa.Super. 516.

N.J.—Standard Baking Co. v. Hi-Grade Coal & Fuel Co., 179 A. 308, 115 N.J.Law 265.

Verdict of nonsuit

Verdict of nonsuit was a nullity which should not have been received by court, since jury were only entitled to render either verdict for plaintiff or verdict for defendant.—Standard Baking Co. v. Hi-Grade Coal & Fuel Co., 179 A. 308, 115 N.J.Law 265.

Iowa.—Garden v. Moore, 156 N.W. 410, 174 Iowa 376.

N.Y.—Appelt v. Timpona, 88 N.Y.S. 2d 43, 195 Misc. 68, reversed on other grounds 91 N.Y.S.2d 869, 275 App. Div. 1046.

"Verdicts" as employed in statute

A trial on which the jury has failed to agree will not be considered as one of the "verdicts," within statute prohibiting new trial where there have been three verdicts on substantially the same evidence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daniel, 115 S.W. 804, 131 Ky. 689, dissenting opinion 115 S.

The report made by the jury on its return to the court after its deliberations have been concluded is not a verdict, but is the material from which the verdict is to be formulated unless it is improper in substance.²⁴

A finding is merely a narrative of the facts claimed to have been proved on either side,²⁵ and its purpose is to present fairly any claimed errors in the charge or rulings of the court.²⁶

Other terms distinguished. In the absence of a statute to the contrary,²⁷ a verdict is a decision by a jury,²⁸ and a finding by a judge is not a verdict,²⁹ but can be expressed only by an order or judgment.³⁰ The term "verdict" is often used in distinction to the answers to special questions, but is not necessarily absolutely synonymous with "general verdict."³¹

A general verdict is that by which the jury pronounce generally on all or any of the issues, either in favor of the plaintiff or in favor of the defendant.

A general verdict is that by which the jury pronounce generally on all or any of the issues, either in favor of plaintiff or in favor of defendant.³² It is a finding in favor of the prevailing party of every material fact properly submitted to the consideration of the jury.³³ Simple responses of "yes" or "no" to issues submitted constitute general verdicts.³⁴ Separate findings on each of separate causes of action are general verdicts.³⁵ A general verdict is an indivisible entity,³⁶ and it cannot readily be separated into its component elements.³⁷ A verdict directed on specific pleas is not a general verdict even though worded as such, and even though there is no objection to the form where the record shows that it was so directed.³⁸

c. Special Verdict

A special verdict is one in which the jury find the facts particularly, and then submit to the court the questions of law arising on them.

A special verdict is one in which the jury find the facts particularly, and then submit to the court the questions of law arising on them.³⁹ It is a special finding by the jury on each material issue of the case,⁴⁰ leaving the ultimate decision of the case on those facts to the court,⁴¹ with a conclusion in the alternative that if on the facts found the law is for plaintiff then the finding is for plaintiff, but if the law is for defendant then the finding is for defendant.⁴²

Although many types of controversies are customarily submitted to the jury on a special verdict,⁴³ such verdicts were unknown and unrecognized by the common law, or by practice prior to the statute of Westminster II, St. 13 Edward I c 30, which in fact originated the special verdict as it now exists.⁴⁴ There also has existed another species of special verdict, as where the jury return

a general verdict for plaintiff, subject nevertheless to the opinion of the court on a special case stated by counsel on both sides, as a matter of law.⁴⁵ However, this proceeding, it has been said, has gone out of practice.⁴⁶

The object of a special verdict is to have all questions of fact in the case finally settled by the jury,⁴⁷ and to find sufficient ultimate facts to enable the court, unaided by the evidence, to apply the appropriate law thereto and to render judgment,⁴⁸ but not to decide disputes between witnesses as to minor facts even though such minor facts are essential to establish, by inference or otherwise, the main fact.⁴⁹ A special verdict, although comprising many findings, is but one verdict.⁵⁰

Special findings distinguished. The fact that a general verdict is accompanied by special findings or answers to special questions does not make the verdict a special verdict.⁵¹ Where there is no general verdict, however, specific findings of the jury as to the facts are to be considered as a special ver-

Similar to "case stated"

A "special verdict" is similar to a "case stated," except that facts are found by jury instead of agreed to and stated by parties, and, like a case stated, the court in pronouncing judgment cannot go beyond facts found in special verdict and infer anything not there found, and what is not found is presumed not to exist, and if facts found are not sufficient to support a judgment the case must be tried again.—Fulforth v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 24 A.2d 749, 147 Pa. Super. 516.

Action for declaratory judgment

A verdict in an action for a declaratory judgment is necessarily a special verdict since the determination of the further issues, namely the rights, status, and other legal relationship of the parties, under the facts determined by the verdict, is for the court.—Crollard v. dict,⁵² or may be so considered where there is neither a general nor a special verdict.⁵³ It has been held that where interrogatories were submitted and answered which embraced and covered all the issues in the cause they might be regarded as a special verdict,⁵⁴ but cannot be so regarded where the interrogatories do not cover all the issues.⁵⁵ Although they may to some extent both subserve the same purpose,⁵⁶ the object of both being to secure fair and impartial answers to questions submitted, free from bias or prejudice in favor of either party or in favor of a particular result,⁵⁷ there is still a material difference between special verdicts and findings by responses to interrogatories.⁵⁸ By the former, no unconditional general verdict is ever properly rendered, but the jury find the facts only and submit the question of law arising on them to the court.⁵⁹ By the latter, answers pertinent to, and perhaps controlling, although not necessarily fully covering, an issue framed, are given, always in connection with a general verdict,⁶⁰ and an answer to a special interrogatory may respond to a single inquiry pertaining to one issue essential to the general verdict.⁶¹ The purpose of the former is to furnish the basis of a judgment to be rendered, and of the latter, by eliciting a determination of material facts, to furnish the means of testing the correctness of the verdict rendered, and of ascertaining its extent.⁶²

As employed in statutes the term "special verdict" does not necessarily mean a finding on each material issue in the case as it did at common law,⁶³ as, for example, in a statute which authorizes demand for a special verdict on any one or more of the issues or particular questions of fact, not for the purpose of determining what judgment shall be entered, but for the purpose of determining whether the general verdict is or is not against law.⁶⁴ Under such a statute special verdicts and special findings are identical except as to name.⁶⁵

Answers to questions by jury in equity cases. Where a court of equity submits part of several questions of fact to a jury, answers thereto do not constitute a special verdict.⁶⁶

d. Verdict Subject to Opinion

In some jurisdictions the jury may bring in a verdict for either party subject to the opinion of the court on a point of law.

In some jurisdictions the jury may bring in a verdict for either party subject to the opinion of the court on a point of law.⁶⁷ This is a general and not a special verdict.⁶⁸ A verdict generally for either party, dependent on a single point of law presented to the court, is good.⁶⁹ The facts on which it arises must either be admitted on the record or found by the jury.⁷⁰ A verdict conditioned on, and subject to, the opinion of the court on a demurrer to the evidence remains conditional until the court acts on the demurrer and gives judgment or sets it aside,⁷¹ and it is error to render judgment on the verdict without determining the demurrer.⁷²

Sole basis of judgment

The special verdict is the sole basis of judgment and it must be complete and consistent in and with itself, without aid or intent or reference to the evidence. If it does not find all the facts essential to sustain or defeat the cause of action it will not support a judgment. e. Conditional Verdict

It is generally held that the jury cannot render a conditional verdict in an action at law, although it is permitted in some jurisdictions.

It is generally held that the jury cannot render a conditional verdict in an action at law.⁷³ In some jurisdictions, however, this practice is permitted.⁷⁴

Failure to comply. Where, after a conditional verdict, plaintiff, by a motion for new trial, prevents defendant from performing the condition, such failure cannot put defendant in default.⁷⁵

f. Perverse Verdict

A perverse verdict is one rendered in disregard of the law as given to the jury by the court.

A perverse verdict is one rendered by a jury which chooses not to take the law from the judge, but acts on their own erroneous view of the law.⁷⁶ It is a verdict rendered in disregard of the law as given to the jury by the court;⁷⁷ one whereby the jury refuse to follow the directions of the judge on a point of law.⁷⁸ It is not necessary that the jury should have acted dishonestly or from improper motives in order to render a verdict perverse;⁷⁹ it is sufficient that they have disregarded the judge's instructions.⁸⁰ However, a verdict which is contrary to an erroneous instruction,⁸¹ or which is sustained by the great preponderance of the evidence,⁸² is not perverse.

g. Privy Verdict

A privy verdict is one given out of court before any of the judges of the court.

A privy verdict is one given out of court, before any of the judges of the court;⁸³ that which, for the sake of being released from confinement, is given by a jury out of court to a judge;⁸⁴ a verdict when the judge has left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privily to the judge out of court.⁸⁵ It is called "privy" because it ought to be kept secret from each of the parties until it is affirmed in court.⁸⁶ Such a verdict has been called a mere nullity,⁸⁷ since it is of no force unless affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court, wherein the jury may vary from the privy verdict.⁸⁸ However, if the court is adjourned to the judge's chamber, it is not privy but public.⁸⁹

h. Special Issues

The object of statutes which permit a party to have the case submitted to the jury on special issues is to enable the party to procure a finding on the facts by the jury without their having knowledge of the legal effect of such finding.

Under some statutes a party may have a case submitted to the jury on special issues, to enable the party to procure a finding on the facts by the jury without their having knowledge of the legal effect of such finding,⁹⁰ so as to remove from the jury any bias or prejudice in favor of or against the parties by reason of the effect of their answers.⁹¹

Similar statement of purpose

The laws authorizing submission of causes on special issues were intended to have jury find, in response to pertinent questions, what the facts are in a given case and remove the

to confine the jury to its proper function as trier of the facts,⁹² and to relieve them from the duty of directly passing on who shall prevail in the suit.⁹³ The findings of the jury on special issues are to assist the court in determining what judgment should be entered,⁹⁴ and it is for the court to determine the legal effect of the facts found by the jury,⁹⁵ and to apply the law to the facts found,⁹⁶ and to render such judgment thereon as the law demands.⁹⁷ The object also is to prevent the jury from first agreeing to give a verdict to one of the parties and then framing answers to carry out the agreement.⁹⁸

1. Special Findings

Special findings are particular findings of individual facts.

Special findings are particular findings of individual facts,⁹⁹ limited to findings of fact.¹ The object of such a finding is to state the ultimate facts,² and not the probative or evidentiary facts.³ The true purpose of special findings of the jury is to serve as an aid in administering justice.⁴

Purposes of propounding interrogatories or questions to a jury, and requiring them to make special findings thereto, in addition to their general verdict, are to bring out the various material facts and assist the jury in arriving at an intelligent verdict;⁵ to give either party, uninfluenced by acts of the court, an answer on a controlling issue without regard to the general verdict;⁶ to test⁷ and explain or limit⁸ the general verdict, and to ascertain on what grounds it rests;⁹ to enable the court to learn the jury's view of material issues¹⁰ and the jury's ability to make correct inferences from existing facts;¹¹ to enable the court to apply the law correctly and guard against any misapplication of the law by the jury;¹² to give the parties the opportunity to ascertain whether the jury has understood and applied the law to the proved facts;¹³

§ 486. Sealed Verdict

- a. What constitutes
- b. Directions as to sealing
- c. Opening

a. What Constitutes

Sealing a verdict means that the findings should be placed in an envelope or other inclosure and the inclosure sealed.

Sealing a verdict means that the findings should be placed in an envelope or other inclosure and the inclosure sealed,¹⁶ and does not mean that the public or private seal of the jury, or any of the members thereof, should be used.¹⁷ A sealed verdict has been held to have no statutory basis, but to be based on convenience and custom.¹⁸ It is only an informal memorandum, not a part of the record.¹⁹ Its function is to provide evidence of the status of deliberation when the jury separated, so that, when the verdict is subsequently returned in open court, there will be no question of improper conduct during the separation as long as the jury then agree to the sealed verdict.²⁰

b. Directions as to Sealing

The court may direct the jury, if they should agree, to sign the verdict, place it in an envelope, and return it into open court.

The court may, without regard to the consent or objection of parties,²¹ direct the jury, if they should agree, to sign the verdict, place it in an envelope, and return it into open court,²² or may direct the bailiff to permit the jury, on agreement, to sign and seal their verdict and return it into court the following morning,²³ or, on the jury's coming into court to report agreement, counsel being absent, may instruct the jury to seal their verdict and return it into court on the following day.²⁴

While the court may, under stipulation of the parties, open a sealed verdict in the absence of the jury and if necessary reduce it to proper form, it may be opened at any time by the court, notwithstanding the parties have agreed that it shall be opened on a particular day.

While the court may, under stipulation of the parties, open a sealed verdict in the absence of the jury and if necessary reduce it to proper form,²⁵ it may be opened at any time by the court, notwithstanding the parties have agreed that it shall be opened on a particular day.²⁶ The accidental unsealing of the verdict by the foreman does not vitiate it,²⁷ nor does the fact that counsel, out of curiosity, opened it.²⁸ Where a sealed verdict is directed, it is error to receive an open verdict.²⁹ In some jurisdictions the reception of a sealed verdict in the absence of some of the jury is illegal unless consented to by the parties.³⁰ Elsewhere it is held that it is not error for the court to receive the verdict without calling the jury back into the box where the losing party does not request their recall or demand the right to poll the jury.³¹ Also it has been held that, if one of the jurors became so sick that he could not be present in court, the judge might receive the verdict with only eleven jurors present,³² or the judge might adjourn court to the juror's house and there, in the presence of all twelve jurors, receive the verdict.³³ If the parties con-

§ 487. Rendition and Reception

- a. In general
- b. Affirming or publishing verdict
- c. Dissent or disagreement of jurors
- d. Inquiry as to grounds of verdict
- e. Resubmission of cause

a. In General

There should be a strict compliance with the prescribed forms of procedure in receiving a verdict.

There should be a strict compliance with the prescribed forms of procedure in receiving a verdict.³⁵ The rendition of a verdict is ineffectual until entered as a judgment.³⁶ The rendition of a general verdict corresponds to the filing of findings of fact.³⁷

Who must read verdict. Under a statute providing that the verdict must be rendered by the foreman, and read by the clerk to the jury, the word "rendered" has been held to mean "returned,"³⁸ and it is not necessary that the foreman read the verdict.³⁹ A refusal to permit the clerk to read orally the verdict, when handed to him by the foreman of the jury, is not error.⁴⁰

b. Affirming or Publishing Verdict

Ordinarily a verdict must be affirmed by the jury in open court and their finding is not a verdict until so affirmed.

Ordinarily a verdict must be affirmed by the jury in open court⁴¹ and their finding is not a verdict until so affirmed.⁴² The verdict to which the jury expressly or tacitly⁴³ assent in open court as read to them is the verdict in the case.⁴⁴ Where it is regarded as necessary that the verdict be received and "published" in open court a verdict prior thereto is not a verdict in law.⁴⁵ It is regarded as "published" when handed to some person directed by the court to receive it.⁴⁶ If the case is withdrawn from the jury while the verdict is still in the hands of the foreman, it is withdrawn before the verdict is published.⁴⁷

c. Dissent or Disagreement of Jurors

A juror may disagree to the verdict after it is received and on his examination on poll, or he may express his dissent when the verdict is about to be delivered.

Although after a verdict is recorded the jury cannot vary from it,⁴⁸ before it is recorded they may vary from the first offer of their verdict.⁴⁹ Accordingly, a juror may disagree to the verdict after it is received and on his examination on poll,⁵⁰ whether or not the verdict is sealed,⁵¹ or he may express his dissent when the verdict is about to be delivered.⁵² A sealed verdict does not become final until it is read into the record and the jurors discharged.⁵³ Until the verdict is received and accepted by the court,⁵⁴ and up to the time of its tender for acceptance,⁵⁵ or prior to the discharge of the jury,⁵⁶ it is the prerogative of any juror to change his mind and to challenge the verdict about to be rendered. Assent may be presumed, if, when the verdict is read in court, it is accepted without objection at the time,⁵⁷ or if assented to by the foreman without disagreement being expressed by other jurors.⁵⁸ Such action is final and the verdict stands as rendered.⁵⁹ In those jurisdictions requiring a unanimous verdict of the jury the poll of the jury must show unanimity.⁶⁰

The mere fact that a juror tried to address the court, after he had assented to the verdict when polled, and the jury discharged, it not appearing that the juror wanted to attack the verdict, is not ground for a new trial.⁶¹ More than one poll may be taken, where the court believes a mistake has been made⁶² or is informed by a juror that he desires to change his vote,⁶³ and the verdict will stand if he thereafter agrees to it on its being read to him.⁶⁴ If the disagreement is merely as to costs, it will not invalidate the verdict,⁶⁵ nor will dissatisfaction with the legal effect of a verdict.⁶⁶ When a juror dissents the jury should be either discharged or returned to their room for further deliberation.⁶⁷ It is error for the court to receive and record a verdict on a showing that a juror, who dissents to a sealed verdict when it is returned in court, agreed to it before the verdict was sealed and the jury separated.⁶⁸

It is generally held that the court may inquire of the jury with respect to their verdict, and the grounds on which they proceeded for the purpose of ascertaining whether the case has been properly tried, or to obtain their intention as an aid to rendering proper judgment.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,⁶⁹ it is generally held that the court may inquire of the jury with respect to their verdict and the grounds on which they proceeded, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the case has been properly tried,⁷⁰ or to obtain their intention as an aid to rendering a proper judgment,⁷¹ without the consent of the parties⁷² and in the absence and without the consent of counsel,⁷³ and the inquiry may be made after the jury have been discharged and have separated.⁷⁴ Neither party has the legal right to bring the jurors before the trial judge and have them orally examined.⁷⁵ Such a proceeding

Verdict after discharge improper

In personal injury action, where first juror when polled announced opposition to verdict for defendant but, under repeated questioning of court and counsel, stated "I now find for the defendant," and fifth juror stated that he was "for the plaintiff," and, after judge had completed the polling of the jury, a motion to declare a mistrial had been made and taken under consideration, and jury discharged, the second dissenting juror answered "for the defendant," the verdict was improperly received and recorded, requiring the award of new trial.—*Bruce v. of inquiry as to the ground of the verdict is discretionary with the court,⁷⁶ which power should be exercised cautiously.⁷⁷ The exercise of this power to ascertain whether the case has been properly tried does not depend on the introduction before the court of legally competent evidence of misconduct by the jury.⁷⁸ It is one of the general supervisory powers of the court over the product of the jury which may be exercised by the court if justice requires, whenever the judge is of the opinion that the jury may have made some mistake or been guilty of some improper conduct which produced their verdict,⁷⁹ the matter in issue being whether a juror's misconduct produced the verdict and not whether a juror misbehaved during trial.⁸⁰

Inquiries as to the time from which the jury computed interest,⁸¹ or, where there are several counts or issues, inquiries as to on which count or issue the jury based their verdict,⁸² or where contradictory verdicts are returned, inquiries as to which is the true verdict,⁸³ or inquiries as to whether or not fraud existed on the part of a vendor,⁸⁴ or as to how the jury arrived at the sum awarded in the verdict,⁸⁵ have been held proper, although as to the last proposition there is also authority to the contrary.⁸⁶ Where the verdict rendered is general in form, inquiry as to the ground of the verdict is not precluded by the direction of the judge, in the charge, to return a special verdict in the event of particular findings.⁸⁷ The answers to the questions may be made a part of the record,⁸⁸ and will have the effect of special findings of the facts stated.⁸⁹ The foreman's answer to inquiries by the court, in the absence of any expression of dissent by the rest of the jurors, may be taken as the answer of the jurymen.⁹⁰

The judge may decline, after the jury have separated, to make an inquiry as to their finding as to a particular fact.⁹¹ A refusal to instruct the jury after their discharge to deliver to counsel the calculations on which their verdict is based is not error.⁹² A refusal to question the jury with respect to specific elements entering into a general verdict, in the absence of a request for special findings submitted to the jury, is not error.⁹³ If the poll of the jury is conducted by counsel, a juror cannot be interrogated as to the grounds of his assent or dissent.⁹⁴ It is not error for the trial court to refuse to summon the jurors before it, after the verdict, to interrogate them as to whether they correctly understood the instructions.⁹⁵

Not required to interrogate jury

In personal injury action, trial judge was not required to interrogate the jury to ascertain whether the ad damnum in the writ influenced jury in any way in arriving at amount of verdict.—Bowman v. City of Newburyport, 38 N.E.2d 682, 310 Mass. 478.

Discretion held not abused

Denial of defendants' motions to have jury recalled and interrogated after verdicts were returned was not an abuse of discretion, where there was no showing that alleged misbehavior by jurors produced unanimous verdicts for plaintiffs, and there was lack of indication of any effect of individual acts of misconduct on jury as a whole, and none of alleged instances of misconduct by jurors were sufficient to warrant order for new trial as a matter of law, and reports given by jurors to defendants' counsel concerning alleged misconduct were conflicting.—Caldwell v. that a juror consented to the verdict merely in order to prevent a hung jury, although not satisfied that the successful party had established his case,⁹⁷ or that the verdict is the result of compromise,⁹⁸ or a quotient verdict,⁹⁹ or that a juror's assent is qualified,¹ the verdict should not be received. It has been held that a judge may, in his discretion, request a jury to reconsider their verdict,² but that he is not bound to do so at the request of counsel.³

In some jurisdictions it is held that, where a sealed verdict is returned, if the jury refuse to affirm the verdict, although they have separated, they may be sent out for further deliberation,⁴ and the verdict thereafter rendered is valid.⁵ Elsewhere it has been held that, where a juror dissents from a sealed verdict, the court should declare a mistrial,⁶ and may not send the jury back to reconsider their verdict,⁷ but if the court does send the jury back to reconsider their verdict, a failure of counsel to object to such proceedings will waive the error.⁸ Where the court directs the jury to retire for further deliberation, failure of the jury to take the form of verdict for defendant or the pleadings and exhibits in the case is not error where the court had directed the jurors to take both verdicts with them.⁹

§ 488. — When, Where, and by Whom Received

A verdict must be returned into open court. In the absence of statutory warrant, the court cannot authorize a person other than the clerk to receive the verdict. A verdict cannot be received and entered during a period of adjournment in the absence of agreement, or announcement by the court that the verdict would be so received, or statutory authority.

64 C.J. p 1062 note 60.

Disagreement or inconsistency

(1) Where disagreement or inconsistency becomes apparent from polling jury, court has power to send jury back to reconsider or correct the inconsistency.—Reed v. Cook, 103 N.Y.S.2d 539.

(2) A trial judge not only has power and authority to decline to receive jury's verdict containing conflicting findings on issues submitted, but it is his duty, on discovering such conflicts, to point them out and retire jury for further consideration of their answers to issues.—Lowrance v. Kenworthy, 157 S.W.2d 879, 138 Tex. 132.

Dissent of one-fourth of jury

(3) Statute providing that jury might be sent out for further deliberation if any juror answered in the negative when jury was polled must be construed with constitutional provision permitting three-fourths of jurors in civil cases to render verdict, and means if more than one-fourth of jurors answer in the negative.—Lehl v. Hull, 53 P.2d 48, 152 Or. 470, rehearing denied 54 P.2d 290, 152 Or. 470.

(4) Where jury poll disclosed that more than one-quarter of members disagreed with verdict, trial judge retained control of proceedings, and properly ordered jury to retire and again consider case.—Van Cise v. Lencioni, 235 P.2d 236, 108 Cal.App.2d 341.

Statute prohibiting third submission

Statute providing that if a jury return a second time without agreeing on a verdict they shall not be sent out again without their consent was not applicable where the jury twice returned a verdict but poll indicated lack of unanimity which resulted merely from a misunderstanding on the part of a juror as to how to evidence his assent to the verdict. The court did not err in sending the jury out a third time because there was merely an appearance of disagreement when in fact there was none.—Wilke v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 245 N.W. 660, 209 Wis. 618.

Refusal to send jury out held not error

Where result of jury poll was eight to four in favor of verdict for defendant, but statement volunteered by one juror who had given a negative answer in poll and further inquiry by court disclosed that such juror misunderstood the inquiry when polled and intended to vote for verdict, receiving the verdict as originally read and refusing to send jury out for further deliberation was not error.—*Fulton v. Discretion not abused

Where jury foreman, in answer to question as to verdict reached, merely stated that jurors felt that both drivers were negligent, but that motorcycle driver was direct cause of accident and defendant should not be held liable, and indicated that verdict was one of no cause for action, whereupon jury was polled and one juror indicated that such verdict was not his verdict, court did not abuse its discretion in directing jurors to return to jury room for further deliberations and denying plaintiff's motion for mistrial.—*White v. A verdict must be returned into open¹⁰ court,¹¹ and is not final until pronounced and recorded in open court,¹² although under some statutes it need not be returned into open court if the parties so agree.¹³ A verdict does not become final and binding until it is approved by the trial court.¹⁴

The verdict can be delivered only to a court legally constituted to receive it.¹⁵ In the absence of statutory warrant, the court cannot authorize a person other than the clerk to receive the verdict,¹⁶ although the parties consent thereto.¹⁷ However, in the absence of special circumstances, the mere recording of a verdict ordinarily is of clerical rather than judicial import,¹⁸ and it is often held that by consent of the parties the clerk may receive a verdict in the absence of the judge,¹⁹ although such practice is an irregularity,²⁰ and is not permitted in the absence of consent.²¹ Where the parties are present and consent to the reception of the verdict, it is not rendered illegal by the absence of the assistant judges.²² According to some authority, a verdict in a case tried by one justice may be reported into court and entered in the presence of another justice,²³ at least where it is done without objection.²⁴ It has been held that receipt of the verdict by the clerk, although the court was present, was not irregular or harmful.²⁵

Where circuit judge was unavoidably detained and could not be present when jury was ready to return verdict, and a member of bar who had no judicial authority other than request of circuit judge that he receive verdict, received verdict over objection of instigator of proceedings, verdict was void as omitting an indispensable requisite of constitutional trial by jury.—*Tennessee Gas Transmission Co. v. In New Jersey

(1) Under court rules governing practice every verdict must be returned to the judge in open court, and the clerk may not be authorized to receive the verdict in the absence of the judge.—Petrosino v. Public Service Coordinated Transport, 61 A. 2d 746, 1 N.J.Super. 19.

A verdict cannot be received and entered during a period of adjournment,²⁸ in the absence of agreement,²⁷ or announcement by the court that the verdict would be received during adjournment if the jury came to an agreement,²⁸ or statutory authority.²⁹ Under a statute providing that a final adjournment of the court shall discharge the jury, it has been held that, where a jury were directed to retire and bring in a sealed verdict, and the court thereupon adjourned for the term, the jury could not thereafter render a verdict,³⁰ but a verdict may be returned during the next term where the statute contemplates the continuance of the jury for a limited time during the ensuing term.³¹ The taking of a recess instead of ordering an adjournment has been held to be notice to counsel and parties to remain in attendance and await the verdict of the jury.³²

§ 489. — Necessity of Presence of Party or Counsel

In the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary, a verdict may be received by the court in the voluntary absence of the parties, or their counsel, or both.

In accordance with the rule now generally recognized, in the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary, a verdict may be received by the court in the absence of the parties,³³ or their counsel,³⁴ or in the absence of both,³⁵ where such absence is voluntary and while the court is in regular session,³⁶ especially where they were called into court and did not respond,³⁷ or where the cause of the complaining party is without merit.³⁸

However, it has been held that the presence of plaintiff is necessary where he has the right to submit to a nonsuit at any time before verdict³⁹ and if, on being called, he does not answer a nonsuit may be taken against him.⁴⁰ At the early common law plaintiff was required to be present at the reception of the verdict to answer if it was adverse to him for the amercement to which he was liable pro falso clamore suo.⁴¹ It is the duty of counsel to remain in the court room until the final disposition of the case⁴² unless he is content to rely on rights afforded him in such absence.⁴³ It is no part of the judge's duty to send for counsel to be present at the return of the verdict.⁴⁴ A request by counsel that the deputy clerk notify him when the verdict is to be received has been held to be a mere personal arrangement between them,⁴⁵ and a failure of the deputy clerk to notify counsel not to affect the validity of the verdict.⁴⁶

§ 490. — Poll of Jurors

- a. Right in general
- b. Time for poll and request therefor
- c. Mode of poll

a. Right in General

The judge may, on request of either party, allow the jury to be polled, and in some jurisdictions it is the absolute right of either party to have the jury polled on request.

Polling the jury is a practice whereby the jurors are asked individually whether they assented, and still assent, to the verdict.⁴⁷ To poll a jury is to

Effort made to reach counsel

It was not error for the court to receive a verdict late at night when neither counsel for plaintiff nor defendant was present, where the court made an earnest effort to reach respective counsel, the court being continuously in session from the time the jury were sent out until verdict was taken, it being the duty of counsel to notify the trial court or the court officers where he could be reached in the event the jury reached a verdict.—Sylvester v. call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each juror to declare what his verdict is, before it is recorded.⁴⁸ The object of polling a jury is to give juror an opportunity to declare his present judgment in open court,⁴⁹ and to ascertain with certainty that each juror approves of the verdict returned and that no one has been coerced or induced to agree to a verdict to which he does not actually assent.⁵⁰

The judge may, on request of either party, allow the jury to be polled,⁵¹ and in some jurisdictions it is the absolute right of either party to have the jury polled on request,⁵² whether the verdict is sealed or declared by the foreman,⁵³ or whether it is special or general,⁵⁴ and in these jurisdictions a refusal by the court to poll the jury on request is error,⁵⁵ although the denial of the right has been held not to render the verdict a nullity.⁵⁶ The right to have the jury polled may not be refused merely because of the form of the request⁵⁷ or the motive which prompts it.⁵⁸ In other jurisdictions

it is discretionary with the court whether it will poll the jury;⁵⁹ and neither party may demand a poll as a matter of right;⁶⁰ but if there is a good reason a request by either party to test the unanimity of the jury by a poll should be allowed.⁶¹ The right to poll does not exist where the verdict is directed,⁶² and if a poll is taken, it is immaterial whether or not the jurors agree with the verdict.⁶³

Waiver. The right to poll the jury may be waived either expressly, or by acts or failure to act.⁶⁴ The right to poll the jury is waived by a stipulation that the officer in charge of the jury may receive the verdict.⁶⁵ On the question whether an agreement of counsel that the jury may bring in a sealed verdict affects the right to poll, the cases are not in accord, some holding that it waives the right⁶⁶ and others otherwise.⁶⁷ Where a juror is absent at the time the sealed verdict is rendered and the jury polled, the right is waived where the attorney objects to any arrangement whereby the absent juror could be polled.⁶⁸ Where the bill of exceptions shows that the sealed verdict was opened and read by consent of counsel, they cannot object that it was read in the absence of the jury, so as to deprive them of an opportunity to poll the jury.⁶⁹ The right is waived when plaintiff⁷⁰ or his counsel⁷¹ is in court when the verdict is returned and fails to request a poll. When given permission by the court to poll the jury, the refusal of counsel personally to conduct the poll is not a waiver of the right.⁷²

b. Time for Poll and Request Therefor

It is too late to make a request for the poll of the jury after the verdict has been received and recorded, or after the jury have dispersed or have been discharged. A poll of the jury must be had immediately on return of the verdict in open court and before debate or discussion thereof.

It is too late to make a request for the poll of the jury after the verdict has been received and recorded,⁷³ or where the jury have dispersed after handing the verdict to the clerk,⁷⁴ or after the jury have been discharged.⁷⁵ A request that the jury be polled on their bringing in a special verdict in which the answers to interrogatories are inconsistent, before the jury further deliberate under the order of the court, is premature.⁷⁶

A poll of the jury must be had immediately on return of the verdict in open court and before debate or discussion thereof,⁷⁷ although it has also been held that it need not be taken when the verdict is returned,⁷⁸ but should be taken within a reasonable time after the request by the party and while the jury are still impaneled.⁷⁹ It has also been held by virtue of statute that a poll is authorized after the clerk has asked the jury if the verdict is theirs, but before the recording of the verdict.⁸⁰ An objection that the jury were not polled comes too late after judgment.⁸¹

While a party may poll the jury in the manner authorized by law,⁸⁷ only questions prescribed by law may be propounded to the jury.⁸⁸ The only proper inquiry on a poll of the jury is whether the verdict is that of each juror,⁸⁹ and, since it is within the discretion of the court whether the poll should be permitted, the refusal to permit other questions is not error.⁹⁰ The correct practice has been held to be for the clerk to call the roll and ask each juror, as his name is called, to answer for the plaintiff or for the defendant.⁹¹ Where the manner in which the jury are to be polled is prescribed by statute, a refusal to poll in strict conformance with the statute is error.⁹² A juror should be asked "Is this your verdict and do you now assent thereto?" or words to that effect,⁹³ but no objection lies to the form "Do you find for the plaintiffs or for the defendant?"⁹⁴ It is not error for the court to refuse to permit the question to be asked the juror "Is this your verdict and are you still satisfied with it?"⁹⁵ If the court in the exercise of its discretion does permit such a question to be asked, it is not error unless the rights of the party are prejudiced thereby.⁹⁶

It is sufficient that the answer of each juror shows

clearly that the verdict was when signed, and is likewise at the time of polling, the verdict of such juror.

No particular form of answer is essential in the polling of a jury,⁹⁷ and it is sufficient that the answer of each juror clearly shows that the verdict was when signed, and is likewise at the time of polling, the verdict of such juror.⁹⁸ If the juror answers "It is not my verdict," no further inquiry can be made of him,⁹⁹ and when a juror dissents from the verdict it is improper to allow counsel to interpose and question the reasons or motive of the juror in changing his mind.¹ In the absence of objection at the time it is a sufficient answer for a juror to say "I assented to it," or "I agreed to it,"² or "It is my verdict as far as it goes."³ A verdict is not vitiated by the fact that a juror hesitated to agree to it,⁴ or where, in answer to the inquiry, he says it is not his verdict but he consented to it, and subsequently answers that it is his verdict,⁵ or says he consented to it under protest,⁶ or that he did not believe the verdict right, but agreed to it for the sake of harmony.⁷ A verdict for defendant will be sustained notwithstanding some of the jurors answer, on interrogation, that, although they assent to the verdict, they were not fully satisfied with the result,⁸ or that "with the lights before them, they found for the defendant."⁹

B. GENERAL VERDICT

§ 491. Propriety and Necessity

A general verdict is proper when it will ascertain the rights of the parties; and whether a general verdict should be returned is generally a matter for the discretion of the jury.

A general verdict is proper when it will ascertain and fix the rights of the parties.¹⁰ The validity of a general verdict is not affected by the fact that a refusal to require special findings might have been error, where such findings are not requested.¹¹ Under a statute providing that, in a case tried by jury as of right, a general verdict must be rendered, the court cannot render a judgment on findings of particular questions of fact in the absence of a general verdict, or a waiver thereof.¹²

Discretion of jury. As a general rule,¹³ and frequently under statutes to that effect,¹⁴ the returning of a general verdict rather than a special one is a matter within the option or discretion of the jury; and this is so especially, or at least, in the absence of statutes to the contrary,¹⁵ or in the absence of a judicial direction for a special verdict,¹⁶ or a request for such a direction.¹⁷ Where, under the statute, the form of verdict rests in the discretion of the jury, the form of the verdict to be rendered does not rest in the discretion of the trial judge,¹⁸ and the parties are entitled to have the case submitted to the jury in such form that the jury can return a general verdict.¹⁹

Waiver of right to general verdict. Where a jury has been called but no general verdict is requested and no objection is taken to the failure of the court to so submit the cause and the issues are submitted on special interrogatories only the parties waive their right to a general verdict.²⁰

§ 492. Preparation and Formulation

The trial judge may prepare the form of the verdict; a form submitted by the court should conform to the pleadings and evidence in the case.

Although it has been held that the furnishing of proper forms of verdict is the province and duty of the court,²¹ it has also been held that a trial judge is not obliged to prepare forms of verdict.²² The court has the power to control the form of the verdict;²³ and certainly the judge may prepare a form of verdict if a party is not prejudiced thereby.²⁴ If the court does not prepare the forms of verdict for the jury, it should at least give clear and specific directions and such information as will enable the jury to frame their own verdict.²⁵ The court may decline to allow the jury to frame their verdict so as to affect the interest of a stranger to the suit.²⁶ In aiding the jury in the preparation of a verdict the court should prevent the jurors from acquiring information forbidden to them.²⁷

Preparation after announcement of oral verdict

Where jury after having deliberated for some time sent a request to trial court for forms of verdict, trial court did not err in permitting jury to announce their verdict orally and then having verdict put in proper form and foreman sign it.—Webb v. Conduct held not reversible error

Conduct of the court at second trial in giving jury motion for judgment on which former verdict was written was held not reversible error, where portion containing former verdict was folded over and court instructed jury not to read inside.—Wade v. Peebles, supra.

If the court does submit a form of verdict to the jury the form should conform to the pleadings and evidence in the case,²⁹ and should be complete as the case requires.³⁰ Where the issues are different between plaintiff and several defendants, it is error for the court to decline to give a form of verdict whereby the jury might find for plaintiff against one defendant and in favor of the other defendants.³⁰ Where there are two separate causes of action against two defendants submitted to the jury at the same time on evidence from which conflicting inferences could be drawn as to the liability of each of the defendants, it is entirely appropriate to submit forms of verdict for the use of the jury as though the issues had been made up by separate pleadings as to each defendant.³¹ Where the only issue in the case is the amount of recovery due plaintiff, a failure to submit a form of verdict for defendant is not error.³² It has been held that the judge cannot, as the clerk of the jury, even at the request of the jury, draw up their verdict.³³

A party may be permitted to prepare proper blank forms of verdict and send them to the jury for their use,³⁴ and where the jury have found for plaintiff for the amount or quantity of his claim the court may direct plaintiff's attorney to formulate the verdict.³⁵

§ 493. — Necessity of Reducing to Writing

Whether or not a verdict must be reduced to writing depends on the statutes and practice of the particular jurisdiction.

In some jurisdictions a verdict may be oral or written, either form being sufficient.³⁶ However, according to other authority, the only verdict is that which the jury announce orally in court,³⁷ and any written paper handed in by the jury as containing their verdict is a mere nullity.³⁸ In still other jurisdictions, under statutory or constitutional provisions, the verdict must be in writing and signed by the foreman.³⁹ It has been held proper to permit the jury to return an oral verdict which is reduced to writing and signed by the foreman in the presence of the jury and the court.⁴⁰ A requirement that the verdict be in writing and entered on the minutes of the court has been held to apply equally to verdicts returned by the jury after deliberation and directed verdicts.⁴¹ Where a verdict is directed, the better practice has been held to be to return a formal verdict in writing;⁴² but the absence of such verdict is not fatal to the validity of the judgment.⁴³

In the absence of a statutory requirement it is not necessary that the verdict be written on any particular piece of paper;⁴⁴ accordingly, a verdict

Where complaint implied that both defendants were present and personally took part in assault, and evidence admitted without objection tended to show that one of defendants, although not present, incited assault, court might have properly submitted verdict covering either theory if evidence warranted findings in its support.—Krudwig v. Koepke, supra.

need not be written on the petition,⁴⁵ although the court may properly direct that the verdict be entered on the petition.⁴⁶

The unanimous concurrence of the jurors is required for a valid verdict except in so far as statutes or constitutional provisions otherwise provide or the parties agree otherwise.

Except in so far as the rule may be affected by a statute or constitutional provision to the contrary, all the jurors must agree on the verdict,⁴⁷ unless the express consent of both parties be shown to the entry of judgment on a verdict assented to by less than all the jurors.⁴⁸ Under this rule a verdict is invalid if it is reached by agreement of the jurors to abide by a decision of less than all of their number,⁴⁹ which taint is not removed by the jury answering and returning with the verdict interrogatories which had been submitted to them.⁵⁰ Where a unanimous verdict is required, the jury, in some jurisdictions, must be unanimous in their opinion on all essential elements of recovery before a verdict of recovery can be returned;⁵¹ but there is also authority holding that unanimity in verdicts means unanimity in the result, and not in the successive steps leading to such result.⁵² The fact that some of the jurors had misgivings as to the verdict does not invalidate it as long as they consent to the verdict.⁵³

Statutory or constitutional provision for less than unanimous verdict. In some jurisdictions under statutory or constitutional provisions to that effect, it is not essential to the validity of a verdict that it have the unanimous concurrence of the jurors, it being sufficient if a specified number of jurors agree on the verdict,⁵⁴ provided all of them take part in the deliberations.⁵⁵ A statutory or constitutional provision that a unanimous verdict should not be required in civil cases has been applied to will contest proceedings,⁵⁶ bastardy proceedings,⁵⁷ cases under a Conservancy Act,⁵⁸ juries called by the chancellor,⁵⁹ and various other causes.⁶⁰ While condemnation proceedings have been held to be within such rules,⁶¹ it has also been held that a "property taking" proceeding does not fall within the rule so that a unanimous verdict is required.⁶² In these jurisdictions a verdict of the requisite

Where property owners brought action against State Highway Department for injury to land due to overflow of water allegedly caused by negligent management and operation of highway and culverts, action was basically for payment for taking private property for public use and not action in trespass, and therefore unanimous jury verdict was required.—Commonwealth v. Kelley, supra.

number of jurors is as conclusive as one by twelve,⁶³ and prejudice does not appear from the fact of its rendition by less than twelve jurors.⁶⁴ However, a verdict where less than the required number of jurors concur is a nullity,⁶⁵ which is not waived by a failure to poll the jury.⁶⁶ Under a statute or constitutional provision where a unanimous verdict is not required, it has been held that the requisite number of the same jurors must agree to all essential answers;⁶⁷ but it is not essential that the same jurors concur in all the essential answers provided the requisite number do so concur.⁶⁸

A failure to instruct the jury that less than a unanimous number could agree on and return a verdict does not vitiate a verdict agreed on and returned by the required number of jurors;⁶⁹ and when the required number of jurors express their clear intention in the verdict the court may enter judgment thereon.⁷⁰ It is for the jury to say whether or not they will render less than a unanimous verdict,⁷¹ and an instruction by the court that as soon as the requisite number agree they are to return the verdict is erroneous.⁷² If the burden of proof is on one party to establish an affirmative answer, and the requisite number of jurors are not convinced that the burden has been met, the jury must return a negative answer.⁷³ A verdict unanimous on its face is good, although the judgment recites that three fourths of the jurors, and not all, concurred therein.⁷⁴ The constitutional or statutory provision providing for a verdict by not less than a specified number does not prohibit the parties to the suit from agreeing or arranging to accept a verdict concurred in by a lesser number of jurors,⁷⁵ since such provision is intended only to prevent compelling the parties, against their wishes, to submit to the acceptance of a verdict by a lesser number.⁷⁶

Time of deliberation as affecting number of concurring jurors. Under a statute so providing, a verdict can be returned by less than unanimous concurrence of the members of the jury only where the jury have deliberated and considered the case for a specified period of time.⁷⁷ In determining whether the jury have deliberated for the requisite period, where the jury have been in retirement for a period well beyond the time proscribed by the statute, the law conclusively presumes that they have been in deliberation for the required length of time.⁷⁸

Action under Federal statute. A unanimous verdict of the jury is not required in a case under the federal Employers' Liability Act brought in a state whose constitution and statutes permit less than the whole jury to return a verdict.⁷⁹

Whether the verdict is required to be signed depends on the rule in the particular jurisdiction; and whether signing must be by the foreman or by the concurring jurors depends on the governing statute.

Where a verdict is not required to be in writing, as discussed supra § 493, a verdict is not, in the absence of statute, required to be signed,⁸⁰ so that an error in the signing of the verdict will not render it invalid.⁸¹ Where, however, signing is required it must be properly signed.⁸² A signature by one of the jurors as foreman in behalf of himself and his fellow jurors has been held to be sufficient.⁸³ Where one of the jurors cannot sign the verdict because unable to sign his name, it is proper for the trial judge to write the juror's name and cause him to make his mark,⁸⁴ and an unattested mark has been held sufficient.⁸⁵

In some jurisdictions it is the rule that the verdict may be signed by the foreman if all the members of the jury concur,⁸⁶ but if less than all concur, all the concurring members must sign,⁸⁷ but trivial errors or irregularities in the signing will not render an otherwise valid verdict a nullity.⁸⁸ Statutes requiring that the verdict be signed by the foreman,⁸⁹ or by the entire jury agreeing on the verdict, if the number is less than twelve,⁹⁰ have been held to be merely directory, so that an unsigned verdict on which a judgment has been entered is not void;⁹¹ but it has also been held that a statute requiring the foreman to sign the verdict is mandatory.⁹² Under a statute providing that, if the verdict is returned by less than an unanimous vote of the jurors, those concurring must sign the verdict, it is not necessary that the form of the verdict be "we the undersigned jurors,"⁹³ and a verdict reading "we the jury" is sufficient, if signed by the requisite number of jurors.⁹⁴ Statutes or rules requiring signature of all jurors under certain circumstances have no application to a case where the cause is tried by less than the regular number of jurors by consent,⁹⁵ or where concurrence by less than all the jurors is agreed to by the parties.⁹⁶

Directed verdict. Where the judge directs the verdict, the signing of a verdict under direction of the court is a mere formality, and may be followed or omitted with equal legality.⁹⁷

§ 496. Certainty and Definiteness; Informality

A general verdict must contain a finding so that judgment may be pronounced on it, but no particular form is required. It must be clear, intelligible, consistent, and certain, but is sufficient if it can be made definite and certain by reference to other matter in the case.

All that is requisite in a general verdict is that it contain such finding as will enable the court to pronounce judgment on it for one party or the other;⁹⁸ and no particular form of verdict is required.⁹⁹ However, the verdict of the jury, to

Foreman's failure to sign as "concurring juror"

Where foreman of jury signed five-sixth verdicts and his name was followed by nine jurors, as "jurors concurring," defects in form of verdicts for failure of foreman, who was in fact a concurring juror, to sign with concurring jurors did not make verdicts a nullity.—Santee v. Incomplete verdict

A mistrial may be granted when verdict returned by jury is incomplete so that no final judgment can be rendered thereon.—Hoffer v. Burd, 49 N.W.2d 282, 78 N.D. 278.

A verdict "We, the jury, find the issues for the plaintiff, and do assess his damages at" which specified a certain sum and which was signed by the foreman, was in proper form.—Cannon v. S. S. Kresge Co., 116 S.W.2d 559, 233 Mo.App. 173.

serve as a basis for a judgment, should be clear, intelligible, consistent, and certain;¹ and it should import a definite meaning free from ambiguity and should show just what the jury intended.² Accordingly, a verdict will not generally be held invalid for mere informality if its meaning is sufficiently intelligible to be the basis of a legal judgment.³ A verdict is generally held to be sufficient if it can be made definite and certain by reference to other matter in the case,⁴ as by a reference to the pleadings,⁵ evidence,⁶ instructions,⁷ or record.⁸

although under some authorities a verdict which can be made certain only by reference to the evidence,⁹ or to the instructions,¹⁰ is bad.

Technical accuracy is not required.¹¹ While it has been said to be the general rule that the verdict must be clear and unambiguous so that a judgment may be based on it without resorting to inference or construction,¹² it is also the rule that a verdict is sufficient if it may by a reasonable construction be understood and a legal judgment entered thereon.¹³ Certainly a verdict is bad where it is so uncertain that it cannot be clearly ascertained what, if any, issues were passed on by the jury,¹⁴ or where it is not certain in itself, and does not find facts from which certainty can be attained,¹⁵ or which cannot be made certain without looking out of the record,¹⁶ or which is otherwise so uncertain or indefinite as not to enable the court to base a legal judgment thereon.¹⁷ Where the verdict does not clearly find the matter in issue, it cannot be helped by intentment¹⁸ or be corrected or cured by the judgment.¹⁹ The test of the validity of a verdict is whether or not it is an intelligible answer to the issue submitted to the jury,²⁰ and although the spelling, grammar, and punctuation are incorrect, if the meaning is plain the verdict will stand.²¹

In applying the foregoing rules it has been held that a verdict is not invalidated by such matters as the use of the word "believe" instead of "find,"²² of "estimate" instead of "assess,"²³ of "verdict" instead of "issues,"²⁴ of "is" instead of "are,"²⁵ of "in" instead of "under,"²⁶ of "evaluating" instead of "valuing,"²⁷ or for omissions of words which are clearly supplied.²⁸ Likewise, a verdict for plaintiff is not bad because it uses the words "contributory negligence" with respect to defendant, where the quoted words are used in a colloquial sense and there is no doubt as to the intention of the jury;²⁹ nor is a verdict improper, or the result of passion or prejudice, because it states that "we find the defendant not guilty."³⁰ So a verdict is not bad because it is written on two pieces of paper,³¹ or states amounts in figures,³² or where it is in the form of a tort verdict although the claim is in contract,³³ or omits the similiter after the verdict.³⁴ Further, a verdict is not bad merely because it states the reasons for the finding³⁵ or does not state the legal conclusion from the facts found.³⁶ A mere statement by the foreman of the jury in open court that the jury have agreed without stating the nature of the decision is not a verdict.³⁷ A jury's verdict against joint tort-feasors on which was written "equally responsible, each defendant" is not thereby invalidated.³⁸

Inconsistency. A verdict is bad and will not support a judgment where it is inconsistent, contradictory, repugnant, or illogical.³⁹ A verdict reached

Failure to fill in blanks for verdict against defendant

Where jury, in trial of consolidated actions, were given blank verdict forms to fill out in each case, and returned blanks as to finding against defendant unsigned, the effect was that jury failed to return a verdict and such failure could not be construed as tantamount to a finding in favor of defendant.—Roadruck v. by the jury on one issue is not affected, with respect to consistency or inconsistency between verdicts, by a verdict reached by the agreement of the parties on other issues.⁴⁰

The inconsistency of verdicts as to several plaintiffs or several defendants is discussed infra § 500; and inconsistent counts, issues, or causes of action are considered infra § 503.

Description of land. A verdict awarding possession of land should contain a sufficient description of the land so awarded,⁴¹ and a description is sufficient if it can be made certain, so that land may be identified, as by reference to monuments, maps, or other well known manner of location.⁴²

§ 497. — Amount of Recovery in General

In actions for money judgment the jury must find the amount due, as well as the right of recovery, and must state it with sufficient certainty and definiteness.

In an action in which a money judgment is sought, the jury must,⁴³ in some instances by virtue of statutes to that effect,⁴⁴ find the amount due as well as the right of recovery; and a general verdict for either party does not authorize judgment for any amount.⁴⁵ Accordingly, in an action in which either plaintiff or defendant is entitled to recover money from the adverse party, the verdict of the jury must assess the amount of recovery;⁴⁶ and a verdict for one of the parties with a finding that there was no sum due is contrary to law;⁴⁷ and where the jury returns a verdict for plaintiff but assesses the amount of recovery as "none," although the evidence showed beyond dispute that plaintiff suffered damages, the trial court may properly refuse to accept the verdict in that form.⁴⁸ It has been said that the better practice requires that the amount be stated even in a directed verdict.⁴⁹ So also, a general verdict for plaintiff in an action for unliquidated damages,⁵⁰ or where the verdict might be for either one of two sums,⁵¹ will not support a judgment for any particular amount. Similarly, a verdict for "nominal damages" is insufficient as a basis for judgment, and the amount of nominal damages must be named.⁵²

The rules as to the certainty and definiteness required in a verdict discussed supra § 496, apply to the finding of the amount due, and a verdict not finding such amount with sufficient definiteness to authorize a judgment to be entered thereon for any definite sum is bad and will be set aside.⁵³ However, strict technical accuracy is not required in the statement of the amount;⁵⁴ and it is sufficient if the amount can be ascertained by mere mathematical calculation;⁵⁵ and a verdict is good although the amount of recovery is stated merely by reference to the amount claimed in the petition, or can be ascertained by a reference thereto,⁵⁶ or by reference to the record.⁵⁷ A general verdict as to the amount due without setting out the findings of the jury on various items of damages is sufficient,⁵⁸ since the jury are not required to state how or by what method of calculation they arrived at their verdict.⁵⁹

In actions for the recovery of money, the omission of the word "dollars"⁶⁰ or of the dollar mark⁶¹ will not vitiate the verdict; nor will a verdict be set aside for manifest mistake in the statement of the amount recovered, where the amount intended to be stated is clear.⁶² Where words and figures in the verdict conflict as to the amount, the words will control⁶³ unless it is clear that the words are the result of a clerical error.⁶⁴

Where the amount due is not in issue, a verdict generally in favor of either party is sufficient, without assessing damages,⁶⁵ even under a statute requiring the jury to assess the amount of recovery, since such a provision does not apply where the amount is not in issue.⁶⁶

Money deposited in court. Where money is tendered and deposited in court, and if the jury find that the amount deposited is insufficient, their proper course is to return a verdict for the whole sum due.⁶⁷

Foreign exchange. Where the value of foreign currency is involved in the determination of the amount of recovery, the verdict must take into consideration the value of the foreign exchange on the proper date.⁶⁸

§ 498. — Interest

If the jury allow interest, the amount allowed must be stated with certainty or must be definitely ascertainable.

If the jury allow interest, their finding must not be so ambiguous or incomplete as to render the amount or rate uncertain.⁶⁹ A verdict is sufficiently definite if it may be rendered certain by mere mathematical calculation⁷⁰ or by reference to the pleadings.⁷¹ For example, a verdict finding the amount on which interest is to be calculated, and the date from which, or period for which, it is to run, is sufficiently certain,⁷² and the computation of interest may be made by the court.⁷³ The verdict is insufficient if the date from which interest is to be calculated is not fixed, and such time cannot be determined from the record or undisputed evidence.⁷⁴ Where there are no specific allegations in the pleadings as to interest fixing a date from which interest could be reckoned, a verdict awarding a specific sum "with interest" is not void as uncertain,⁷⁵ and the "with interest" will be construed as a recovery of interest from the date of the verdict.⁷⁶ In a suit on an ex contractu obligation, the proper construction of a verdict awarding a certain sum "with interest" should be that interest is awarded from the date the obligation became due.⁷⁷ A verdict which gives interest from judicial demand, which date is shown by the record, is sufficiently certain.⁷⁸

Where the jury render a verdict for a certain sum "and interest," although such verdict is defective, it being the duty of the jury to compute the interest or give the grounds of computation, plaintiff may take judgment for principal alone,⁷⁹ and a verdict, although including interest in the damages and thus informal, may be allowed to stand.⁸⁰ Where the verdict for plaintiff includes principal and interest, and fails to specify separately the amount of each, a new trial should be granted, unless plaintiff renounces future interest on the judgment.⁸¹ Where the verdict, in a case in which plaintiff is not entitled to interest, shows on its face that it is made up in part of interest, it cannot be sustained, as to such part, although the total amount is less than the jury could have awarded, without including any interest.⁸² A judgment will not be reversed because the judge computed interest, instead of allowing the jury to do it, no objection having been made at the time.⁸³

Separate findings as to interest. According to some authority, interest on an unliquidated claim should be included in the damages as one gross sum, and should not be stated separately,⁸⁴ although a verdict stating principal, interest, and total amount, although irregular in form, has been held not to be erroneous.⁸⁵

§ 499. Designation of Parties

The designation of the parties in the verdict must conform to the pleadings and must be sufficiently definite to make certain of the persons intended to be designated; but informality or inaccuracy is not fatal if the intention of the jury is clear.

The verdict must conform to the pleadings with respect to the names and descriptions of the parties,⁸⁶ and must be sufficiently definite to make cer-

in absence of proof of conversion value of such crowns as of date of commencement of action for amount deposited, as conversion should have been made at rate prevailing on date of trial or judgment.—*Buxhoeveden v. tain the person or persons against whom it is rendered.⁸⁷ However, an informality or inaccuracy in the naming of parties for or against whom a verdict is rendered is not fatal, if the intention of the jury is otherwise sufficiently shown,⁸⁸ as by reference to the pleadings,⁸⁹ the instructions,⁹⁰ or the record;⁹¹ and this is so particularly where the mistake in the name or designation of a party is clearly a clerical error.⁹² There being but one party plaintiff and one defendant, a finding of the amount due plaintiff is sufficient without a finding that it is due from defendant,⁹³ but it is not sufficient to find a verdict against a party by name without designating him as a party.⁹⁴

Since, under the rules of construction, words in the plural number may be construed to include the singular, and vice versa, unless the contrary plainly appears from the context, as discussed infra § 521, where there are several defendants, a general verdict for or against defendant, or defendants, without specifying which, the interests of defendants being identical, is sufficient as a verdict for or against all defendants,⁹⁵ unless liability can be attached to but one,⁹⁶ or the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict as to one.⁹⁷ Where there are several defendants, a general verdict for plaintiff is sufficient,⁹⁸ separate verdicts not having been demanded by defendants,⁹⁹ or a finding in favor of one or more of them not having been directed.¹

A verdict for "plaintiffs," there being but one plaintiff,² or for "plaintiff," there being several plaintiffs,³ or the same party being plaintiff in two capacities,⁴ is sufficient, if the intention of the jury drawn from the whole verdict is plain. Moreover, the same rule applies to a verdict in a joint action, for one of two plaintiffs by name,⁵ or where both plaintiffs claim in the same right.⁶ However, in a proceeding brought by two plaintiffs, a verdict

In action for breach of a builder's contract, insertion by jury of figures one hundred seventy dollars after words "write your verdict here," included in a written charge submitted to jury wherein court instructed that should jury find for the plaintiff they should state amount of money which would reasonably compensate him was held to show that jury awarded plaintiff one hundred seventy dollars damages against defendant, as against contention that verdict failed

Designation of parties in instructions

In action for balance of tax assessment against vendor and vendees of property wherein vendees filed cross-petition against vendor, jury's verdict finding "for defendants" was held not uncertain so as to invalidate verdict against vendor where considered in connection with instruction naming vendor and wife as "plaintiffs"; such designation, although incorrect, serving to point out to jury those meant to be included in each designation and directing in whose favor it should return verdict based on issue as to who assumed improvement lien.—*Frazier v. in favor of "plaintiff" is too uncertain to warrant a judgment for the principal plaintiff alone.⁷

A general verdict is good as to the parties before the court, although one of the parties has not served or has not appeared,⁸ or is dead,⁹ or although rendered in the name of a former plaintiff who is represented by his heirs;¹⁰ and on dismissal or disclaimer as to some of the defendants, a general verdict for plaintiff is valid as to the remaining parties,¹¹ as is such a verdict where there has been a substitution of parties plaintiff.¹² However, a verdict for plaintiffs for the entire interest or property sued for has been held to be improper where a plaintiff who died before the trial remained a party, and no new party was made.¹³

Where two actions are joined for purpose of trial, a verdict for defendant is a finding against both plaintiffs.¹⁴

Set-off claimed by part of defendants. Where there are three defendants, one of which files a counterclaim, a verdict awarding a recovery to the "counterclaimant" will be construed as a recovery in favor of the one counterclaimant.¹⁵ Where there is a suit against three defendants and a claim of set-off is filed by two of them, a verdict in favor of the defendants generally for a given sum will be construed as one in favor of the defendants pleading the set-off for the amount of the verdict, and in favor of the other defendant generally.¹⁶

Statutory form. A statute providing that the verdict shall be in the words, "Verdict for the plaintiff," or "Verdict for the defendant," has been held to be merely directory;¹⁷ and accordingly a verdict for the "petitioner" is sufficient.¹⁸

§ 500. — Severance

Whether there should be one or separate verdicts in cases involving several parties plaintiff or defendant depends on the rule in the jurisdiction and the circumstances of the case; but in general all verdicts in cases tried together should be consistent with each other.

In certain actions against defendants jointly ordinarily there must be but one verdict,¹⁹ and the entry of separate verdicts is error.²⁰ Thus, in a trial against two or more defendants jointly liable for the same tort, there should be one verdict against all the defendants.²¹ If, under the pleadings and proof, the verdict, if any, against defendants must be joint, a verdict against "defendant" will be so understood.²² However, the fact that the jury wrote separate verdicts as to each of several defendants does not render it unintelligible.²³

On the other hand, separate verdicts should generally be found in cases tried together²⁴ unless there is an order of court consolidating the cases.²⁵ Where statutes authorize separate verdicts against separate defendants, such provisions are procedural only,²⁶ and in order to receive several verdicts thereunder the substantive law controlling the case must be such as to impose several separable and different respective liabilities.²⁷ A mere agreement to try two cases together does not authorize a single verdict.²⁸ However, a failure to request separate verdicts as to each case has been held to waive the right to object to a general verdict.²⁹ A jury should not be called on to render two verdicts, as to separate defendants, at different times in the same case.³⁰ In the technical procedure of the early common law it was an established principle that a joint verdict must stand or fall in its entirety.³¹

In general, where there are several distinct causes of action tried together, inconsistent and irreconcilable verdicts are fatally defective and should normally be set aside,³² although it has also been held that where cases are consolidated for trial there is no rule that the jury must return consistent verdicts,³³ and that it does not follow that because two separate and distinct causes of action are tried by the same jury that the findings in one cause are binding on the jury in the other cause of action, if the facts are in dispute.³⁴ Where several actions are tried together, verdicts awarding recovery to some parties on one theory and to other parties on another theory are not fatally inconsistent,³⁵ even where all the plaintiffs seek recovery for injuries arising from the same act of defendant, where there is evidence to sustain each verdict.³⁶ However, where several causes of action are identical and are defended on the same ground, verdicts for plaintiff on one cause of action and for defendant on others are inconsistent and cannot stand.³⁷ Where two actions joined are of such a nature that recovery can be had in only one of such actions, verdicts in favor of plaintiff and against defendants in both actions are inconsistent.³⁸ With respect to concurrent negligence plaintiff may be awarded verdicts against both defendants.³⁹ Where defendants' liability is joint and several the verdicts may find one or more of the defendants liable and may exonerate others.⁴⁰ Where there are two plaintiffs claiming in joint right, the jury cannot find in favor of one and against the other,⁴¹ unless the defense, such as the statute of limitations, is personal to one of the plaintiffs;⁴² but a verdict is not void as inconsistent which awards substantial damages to two plaintiffs but under the same facts denies recovery to a third plaintiff who is entitled at most only to nominal damages.⁴³

The validity of an inconsistent or illogical verdict generally is discussed supra § 496; and inconsistent counts, issues, or causes of action are discussed infra § 503.

Resident and nonresident defendants. In an action against a resident and a nonresident, it has been held that the jury cannot return a verdict against the nonresident defendant unless they also find against the resident defendant;⁴⁴ but under the proper evidence they may return a verdict against the resident defendant alone without returning a verdict against the nonresident defendant.⁴⁵

Failure to find as to some defendants. Where defendants are severally liable, a verdict against one, or some, not taking into account others is good,⁴⁶ except in so far as the rule may be affected by statutory provision to the contrary,⁴⁷ under which a verdict that fails to dispose of all the parties is fatally defective.⁴⁸ In some jurisdictions silence as to one defendant is held to raise a necessary implication of a finding in favor of, and is sufficient to, support a judgment as to the defendant not named,⁴⁹ particularly where the relationships of defendants to plaintiff are different,⁵⁰ where the defendant as to whom there is no finding in the verdict was not served,⁵¹ or where the answers of the jury to special interrogatories show that such defendant was not liable.⁵² According to other authority, a verdict against one of the defendants and silence as to the other is not a verdict in favor of the latter,⁵³ but is a failure of the jury to find on all the issues,⁵⁴ unless the instructions to the jury show a meaning to the contrary;⁵⁵ and it has been held to be proper for the court to send the jury back to the jury room to reconsider their verdict.⁵⁶ A verdict in favor of one defendant, but silent as to a codefendant, is not defective when the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment by default against the codefendant.⁵⁷

Joint contract. In actions on a joint contract there cannot be a verdict in favor of one and against other defendants,⁵⁸ unless on a plea of the statute of limitations,⁵⁹ infancy,⁶⁰ or bankruptcy;⁶¹ and a separate verdict against each defendant in such a case is bad.⁶² Thus, where the liability of a principal is the measure of the liability of his

Finding as to punitive damages

Fact that, in action against employee, his corporate employer, and corporation's vice-president and general manager, for injuries received by plaintiff in altercation allegedly occurring in course of employee's employment by the other defendant, award of punitive damages, made as to the others, was not made against employee did not necessarily result in an implied finding that employee's acts were without malice.—Brownand v. Setting aside of judgment not required

(1) Where recovery was sought against both principal and agent for injuries sustained because of negligent operation of automobile by agent, and verdict was only against principal, verdict against principal was not required to be set aside on ground that jury exonerated agent and that principal's liability was required to rest on doctrine of respondent superior, since verdict was tantamount to no verdict with respect to agent.—Brokaw v. Black-Foxe Military Institute, 231 P.2d 816, 37 Cal.2d 274.

(2) A judgment against an association was not required to be set aside because the verdict was silent as to the agent of the association who was allegedly the principal tort-feasor, where there was nothing to indicate that the jury's failure to find with respect to the agent was intended as a verdict in his favor and the proceedings indicated that its failure to do so was due to inadvertence.—State Rubbish Collectors Ass'n v. Siliznoff, 240 P.2d 282, 38 Cal.2d 330.

Verdict held not silent as to parties

In reciprocal negligence actions by parties to automobile collision, verdict that evidence was insufficient to place blame of accident on either party, and that, therefore, jury would not render verdict for any party, was sufficient as verdict that neither party had sustained his burden of proof, and thus decided all issues in case, and was not silent as to one, or all of defendants, or issues.—Brand v. elsewhere the exemption of one defendant from liability by a verdict in favor of another is said to be limited to the cases in which the doctrine of respondeat superior applies;⁷² but in any event, where one joint tort-feasor is the sole agency through which the tort is committed, a verdict in favor of that tort-feasor will discharge all others whose liability derives therefrom.⁷³ However, in some instances it has been held that, even though the verdict is inconsistent in that one defendant is found liable and another not, that is no reason for depriving plaintiff of whatever relief he actually was awarded;⁷⁴ and this rule has been applied even in the case of liability based on the doctrine of respondeat superior.⁷⁵ In an action for negligence against several defendants, if the allegations and evidence relate wholly to the negligence of a third person not sued, who was at the time acting for all the defendants jointly, and no direct act on the part of either of the defendants is shown, a verdict for one defendant and against others is inconsistent.⁷⁶ A verdict in favor of some of the defendants and against the others, based on conflicting evidence, which is the same as to all defendants, cannot be permitted to stand.⁷⁷

§ 501. Responsiveness to Issues and Evidence

It is a well-settled rule that the verdict must respond to the issues as raised by the pleadings and the whole evidence, and must dispose of all disputed issues in the case.

With respect to responsiveness, it is a well-settled rule that the verdict must respond to the issues,⁷⁸ as raised by the pleadings⁷⁹ as well as to such issues as may be established by the whole⁸⁰ evidence.⁸¹ Thus the verdict must dispose of all the disputed issues in the case.⁸² However, it is not necessary that the verdict be in the words of the issue,⁸³ or technically embrace all the issues,⁸⁴ and it is sufficient if in sense or legal effect it substantially responds to the pleadings and covers the issues.⁸⁵ Thus, it cannot be objected to a verdict that it is too broad if every essential matter put in issue is concluded by it;⁸⁶ nor is it an objection that it contains surplusage.⁸⁷ Under some statutes, if the verdict is not responsive to the issues submitted to the jury, the court may call their attention thereto and send them back for further deliberation.⁸⁸

The jury need not find on an issue as to which there is no evidence⁸⁹ or which is established by uncontroverted evidence;⁹⁰ or dispose of matters not within the issues made by the pleadings,⁹¹ or find on issues which have been removed from the controversy by the admissions of the parties.⁹² So also, a verdict which does not determine the issue in accordance with the undisputed contention of either party,⁹³ or which contradicts facts admitted by the pleadings,⁹⁴ or is contrary to the undisputed evidence,⁹⁵ or improperly considers an issue which has been withdrawn,⁹⁶ is erroneous. A verdict which finds that a party is entitled to something which is not claimed in the pleadings is not responsive to the issues.⁹⁷ A verdict based on, or pursuant to evidence tending to support, a different theory from that presented in the pleadings cannot stand.⁹⁸ However, it has been held that rea-

Quantum meruit

Where plaintiff originally submitted an additional issue seeking recovery on a quantum meruit, which issue was subsequently withdrawn, and defendant, though denying existence of a contract, admitted that plaintiff had performed some services, a verdict for plaintiff for less than amount sought indicated that jury improperly considered issue seeking recovery on a quantum meruit.—Compass Sales Corp. v. sonable inferences drawn from the evidence are proper bases for a verdict.⁹⁹ The same rules will be applied in equitable as in legal actions to determine the sufficiency of the verdict.¹

Absence of proof of cause of action. A verdict for defendant is required when the cause of action laid is not proved, since a verdict founded on any other evidence is not responsive to the issues raised by the pleadings.²

Issue misunderstood. A verdict will be set aside when it is apparent from its form that the jury misapprehended the issue.³

Absence of issue. The verdict of a jury without a legal issue to try is a nullity.⁴

Amount of recovery. The amount of recovery awarded by the verdict must be responsive to, and in conformity with, the issues as presented by the pleadings and evidence.⁵ A verdict which is not the result of a compromise is responsive to the issues, although it does not find an amount due either in accordance with the claims of plaintiff or defendant.⁶ Where the issue of punitive damages is not submitted to the jury, only actual damages are recoverable.⁷ The mere fact that the verdict in an action for false representations inducing a sales contract equalled the price paid does not, as a matter of law, show that the jury ignored all other items concerned in the case.⁸ In an action by a partnership where the parties are not claiming as individuals, an award in the verdict in both capacities is erroneous.⁹ A verdict for the reasonable value of services rendered is unauthorized under pleadings and proof of services under an express contract;¹⁰ and where a cause of action is based on an express contract, and the answer simply denies the making of any contract, an award for a sum other than the sum provided for in the express contract alleged will be not responsive to the issues.¹¹ Where several items of damages are alleged, a verdict specifying the damages to which plaintiff is entitled has been held to be a verdict in favor of defendant on the other items alleged.¹² A disparity between the amounts allowed for various items of damage claimed will not render the verdict improper unless it indicates perversity on the part of the jury.¹³

Counterclaim or set-off. A verdict failing to dispose of cross pleas,¹⁴ or a counterclaim,¹⁵ or plea of reconvention,¹⁶ or a cross complaint¹⁷ is fatally defective as not disposing of the issues, at least where there is nothing to show that such omission

Theory held not necessarily different

Statement of jury's foreman, when jury rendered a general verdict for plaintiff, that defendant was negligent in not having proper supervision at revolving door in which plaintiff was injured, did not show that jury arrived at its verdict on an erroneous theory, since defect in braking device of door might create such a hazard that reasonable care would call for supervision of traffic through door until defect was remedied.—Raga v. was intentional rather than inadvertent.¹⁸ Where no set-off is pleaded a verdict in favor of defendant for a certain sum cannot stand.¹⁹ Where the verdict is a finding "neither for the plaintiff nor the defendant," it has been held sufficiently to pass on the issues in the primary suit and on the counterclaim.²⁰

Conformity to instructions. A verdict may be sufficiently responsive to, and may dispose of, the issues under the law and the facts of the case although it does not follow the instructions given by the court.²¹ Where an instruction directs a verdict for either party on a hypothesized statement of facts, the jury must find all the facts hypothesized to exist before finding a verdict thereunder.²²

§ 502. Several Counts or Issues

A general verdict on two or more issues is good where it appears that all issues are determined by the verdict, but not otherwise; and where separate issues are set up by separate causes of action or by separate pleas all such issues should be disposed of by the verdict.

A general verdict on two or more issues is good where the finding necessarily shows that the subject matter of all the issues was determined by the verdict;²³ and where several issues are left to the jury, if one found by them necessarily negatives others which they have failed to find, the judgment will stand.²⁴ A verdict capable of a construction in which it may be understood as comprehending all the issues is good.²⁵ A statute providing that a general verdict, although it may not in terms answer every issue joined, is nevertheless held to embrace every issue, unless exception is taken at the term at which the verdict is rendered, is not limited to the effect of a general verdict on two or more counts,²⁶ but includes a general verdict on every issue joined whether the issue is joined by plea to the declaration, or by replication to an affirmative plea and joinder of issue thereon, or otherwise.²⁷

Separate counts. A general verdict is not objectionable, where the petition, although containing two or more counts, states substantially only one cause of action,²⁸ or where the several counts relate to the same transaction,²⁹ or where plaintiff might have included all that the petition sets up in one count instead of two,³⁰ and a recovery on either count would bar a suit on the other count.³¹ Where there are two counts in a declaration, and evidence given on both and a general charge by the court on the facts applying to each count, a general verdict on both counts is not erroneous.³² Where a verdict for plaintiff states the items on which the jury found, defendant is not prejudiced by the failure of the jury to specify in the verdict the counts on which the verdict was based.³³ Where the jury finds for plaintiff on both of two independent paragraphs of the complaint, the judgment will not be reversed for error in the finding on the second paragraph if that on the first paragraph is proper, and the paragraph is sufficient to support the recovery.³⁴

Distinct causes of action. Generally, where the petition or complaint sets up several different and distinct causes of action, the jury should find a separate verdict as to each cause,³⁵ or designate the cause of action on which the verdict is rendered,³⁶ at least where they are pleaded in the alternative.³⁷ However, the rule is not universal,³⁸ and it is held that a general verdict by the jury without stating on which of several causes of action the verdict was rendered is not reversible error,³⁹ particularly a verdict in damages substantially responsive to all the issues,⁴⁰ or where at the trial all the counts but the one found on were ignored,⁴¹ or withdrawn from the consideration of the jury by instruction,⁴² or where the jury were instructed that they must find for plaintiff as to the existence of each cause of action before any damages could be assessed thereon,⁴³ or where the extent of defendant's liability under each of several counts in the petition is undisputed, if he is liable at all,⁴⁴ or when the causes of action were stated in a single count.⁴⁵ If a general verdict for one party virtually answers and negatives all the issues, it is sufficient.⁴⁶ It has been held that a general verdict, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, may be applied to all causes of action,⁴⁷ and may be sustained if one of such causes is tried without error,⁴⁸ although it has been held to the contrary by other authorities that there must be no error as to any of the causes.⁴⁹

Verdict for and against plaintiff on separate counts. A verdict may be for defendant on one count and for plaintiff on other counts;⁵⁰ and where the jury specify the counts on which a finding for plaintiff is based it is in effect a finding for defendant on all other counts.⁵¹ However, such implied finding is not a finding against the truth of the facts alleged so as to invalidate a verdict based on many of the same facts under another count.⁵² A party can have but one recovery where all counts relate to the same transaction;⁵³ consequently a verdict for plaintiff on one of the counts and a denial of recovery on the others based on the same transaction is not error.⁵⁴

Receipt of separate verdicts. If a special verdict on each issue is desired it should be demanded.⁵⁵ It is not error for the court to receive separate verdicts on separate counts;⁵⁶ and a statute authorizing the joining of separate causes of action in one action carries with it, without an express

Valid and invalid verdicts in consolidated cases. Where several cases are consolidated for trial simply as a time-saving device to preclude a series of separate trials based on the same general facts, even though certain verdicts are incomplete or improper, that fact alone will not vitiate the others.⁵⁸

Single or separate pleas. A general verdict is an answer to all the counts of a declaration where the general issue was pleaded to all;⁵⁹ but a verdict on the general issue only is erroneous where the general issue and special pleas are pleaded.⁶⁰ Where defendant interposes several pleas to a single count, or to several counts founded on the same transaction, a general verdict for plaintiff is a finding against defendant on all the issues and is sufficient.⁶¹ A special verdict for plaintiff on one of such issues, ignoring the others, is bad,⁶² unless it is a necessary conclusion from the record that the jury considered all the issues and found them against defendant.⁶³ Under some statutes a verdict in defendant's favor should show on which of the several pleas it was rendered;⁶⁴ and under such a statute it has been held that plaintiff may invoke this requirement at any time before the verdict has been finally received and the jury dispersed.⁶⁵ A requirement that a verdict for a defendant who relies on separate defenses state on which of the defenses it is based does not apply if the defenses are admissible under mere denials, but it is applicable if the defenses are or should be specially pleaded.⁶⁶

Pleas in bar and in abatement. Where there are pleas in abatement and in bar, a general verdict is sufficient if the finding is in favor of the same party as to both sets of pleas;⁶⁷ otherwise the verdict should be a special finding separately as to each.⁶⁸ When a case is tried on both a plea in abatement and a plea in bar, the jury, in the event of finding for defendant, should indicate the issue on which they found,⁶⁹ although it has been held that where the issues are tried together a general finding for plaintiff is to be construed as a finding against all the pleas.⁷⁰

Plea of venue. The jury should be required to make a separate finding on a plea of venue.⁷¹

§ 503. — Defective, Immaterial, or Inconsistent Counts or Issues

It is frequently, although not universally, held that where a general verdict is given on several counts the verdict will be sustained if any one or more of the counts are good. Whether a general verdict on inconsistent counts or defenses or immaterial counts will be sustained depends on the circumstances of the particular case.

In some jurisdictions in the absence of statute a general verdict cannot be sustained where there are two counts in the petition stating separate causes of action, one good and one bad, and the court has erroneously submitted the bad count as well as the good one to the consideration of the jury,⁷² particularly where the erroneous counts have been submitted to the jury over protest by demurrer,⁷³ unless the evidence adduced at the trial is applicable only to the good counts,⁷⁴ although where there is but one cause of action stated in separate counts if there is one good count in the petition a general verdict will be upheld.⁷⁵

On the other hand, it is the rule in other jurisdictions, either under, or apart from, or without reference to, statutes so providing, that where a general verdict is given on several counts such verdict will be referred to the good count or counts and will be permitted to stand if any one or more of the counts are good;⁷⁶ and if defendant wishes to question the sufficiency of any of the counts, he should request separate verdicts on each count.⁷⁷ Under such a statute, where the declaration consists of a special count and the common counts, a general verdict will not be set aside because the special count fails to disclose a cause of action.⁷⁸ Such a statute, however, will not apply where the court gives an instruction on the bad counts which would authorize a verdict on such counts,⁷⁹ or where a good and a defective cause of action are so commingled that it is impossible to tell for which alleged injury the jury found the verdict.⁸⁰ In any event, a general verdict cannot be sustained where there are some bad counts and the special findings are that plaintiff has sustained each count.⁸¹ It has been held in some of such jurisdictions that where a general verdict is rendered in an action charging ordinary negligence and also malice or willful and wanton misconduct the verdict is presumed based on, and must be sustained by, the count charging malice or willfulness.⁸²

A statute providing that an entire verdict given on several counts shall not be set aside if any one or more of the counts are good, has been held to be imperative⁸³ and universal in its scope,⁸⁴ applying also to an inquisition of damages, taken on default.⁸⁵

allowed on the insufficient cause of action, will be set aside.⁸⁶ Similarly, where recovery is sought for the loss or destruction of two items and the action is invalid as to one and the verdict is in a gross sum for both, the award cannot be segregated and held to be valid as to one item.⁸⁷

Inconsistent counts. Where two counts are inconsistent, a general verdict for plaintiff will be set aside,⁸⁸ as will be also a verdict inconsistent with either of the two issues in an action;⁸⁹ but a special verdict on one of the counts will support a judgment where the two counts are inconsistent only in stating the nature and origin of plaintiff's rights.⁹⁰ Where the declaration contains counts on contract and quantum meruit, a verdict may be returned on either count;⁹¹ but it has been held that if both were proved the contract count would control.⁹² Although counts of a declaration for the same cause of action are inconsistent, if no motion to elect is made, a general verdict for plaintiff will stand if the evidence supports either count.⁹³

Inconsistent defenses. A general verdict for defendant will not be set aside because of inconsistent issues set up in defense, the verdict necessarily deciding one issue in his favor,⁹⁴ at least where there is no error in the instructions as to such defenses.⁹⁵

Immaterial issue. A verdict founded wholly on an immaterial issue will be set aside;⁹⁶ but where issue is taken on several pleas, some of which are material and others immaterial, the verdict will stand⁹⁷ unless the evidence sustains only the immaterial issue, in which case, if there are other issues, defendant has been held to be not entitled to a general verdict.⁹⁸

Instructions. Where there is an erroneous charge as to one count, it must appear affirmatively that the general verdict was not based on that count, or the verdict will be set aside.⁹⁹ However, it has also been held that where the trial court gave an affirmative charge on a specific count of the complaint the verdict for plaintiff must be treated as responding to that charge.¹

§ 504. — Counterclaim, Set-Off, and Payment

Where a set-off or a counterclaim is pleaded, ordinarily only one verdict is required; it should state the finding of the jury on the counterclaim unless such finding is obvious.

Where a set-off or a counterclaim is pleaded, it becomes a part of a single controversy between the parties and only one verdict is required according to the facts.² However, the rendition of separate verdicts, one on plaintiff's petition and the other on defendant's cross complaint or counterclaim, does not of itself disclose error.³ Ordinarily, the verdict should state a finding of the jury on the cause of action under the allegations of the petition and also on the counterclaim;⁴ but, where a finding on plaintiff's cause of action is necessarily decisive of the whole case, a general verdict is sufficient even though it makes no mention of the counterclaim.⁵ Similarly, where the allegations of a complaint and those of a counterclaim are of such a nature that the finding rendered for defendant on the counterclaim necessarily involves a finding against plain-

Statute as to cross action

In action for damages resulting from a collision between plaintiff's automobile and defendant's truck, defendant's claim for damages to, and for loss of use of, truck arising out of same collision is not a set-off or counterclaim but is in the nature of a cross action and as a result of which only one verdict can be rendered, although jury considers two distinct claims.—Nash v. tiff on the complaint, an express finding on the complaint is unnecessary.⁶ A verdict "for defendant" is sufficient, as to form, to defeat plaintiff's claim,⁷ but is not sufficient as a basis of a decree in favor of defendant on a cross bill.⁸ Where the amount claimed in the counterclaim is in excess of that claimed by plaintiff, a verdict "for the defendant" without granting damages on the counterclaim is not repugnant.⁹ Where the parties stipulate that if the jury find for defendant their verdict shall be for a certain amount on a counterclaim interposed by him, a verdict for defendant for such amount covers both causes of action.¹⁰

In some jurisdictions where there is a set-off or counterclaim, the verdict need not name the amounts found due plaintiff and defendant respectively, but only the difference;¹¹ elsewhere it has been held that the verdict should show affirmatively the amounts of the respective findings.¹² A finding that the amounts due plaintiff and defendant on their respective claims were equal is sufficiently specific as to the amounts due each.¹³ While it has been held that a general finding for defendant is not to be construed as a finding that the amounts were equal,¹⁴ it has also been held that a general verdict for defendant, where a counterclaim has been set up, means prima facie that defendant's counterclaim equally offsets plaintiff's claim;¹⁵ but it is the better practice to have the jury declare in their verdict that the counterclaim offsets plaintiff's claim, and then render a verdict for defendant.¹⁶ If the jury find specially on the cause of action and the counterclaim, the verdict must show clearly in whose favor the balance rests and the amount thereof.¹⁷

An allowance of one item of a counterclaim sufficiently shows that the jury considered and determined the claim in its entirety and denied all other items.¹⁸ Where the whole record shows that the counterclaim was considered the verdict should be regarded as responsive to the issues, although it does not mention the counterclaim by name.¹⁹ A verdict stating that the offset of defendant was not considered cannot be construed as a denial of defendant's offset.²⁰ A finding of no cause of action as to defendant's counterclaim does not affect the validity of a verdict for defendant on plaintiff's claim.²¹

General issue or denial with set-off or counterclaim. Where there is a notice of set-off under the general issue, a finding that plaintiff is indebted to defendant in a stated amount is good, since by necessary inference it is a verdict for defendant.²² Conversely, in such a case a general verdict for plaintiff is a valid finding by the jury, the set-off being in effect a part of the issue.²³ On a general denial and counterclaim pleaded, a general verdict for plaintiff is sufficient to dispose of both issues.²⁴ Where the verdict was for plaintiff, it has been held to be immaterial that defendant's plea of recoupment was intended as a counterclaim for an affirmative judgment rather than a mere defense.²⁵

Inconsistent findings. The finding for plaintiff on his complaint and for defendant on his counterclaim must be consistent;²⁶ and a verdict granting recovery for defendant on a defense and counterclaim which are inconsistent cannot stand,²⁷ although plaintiff failed to move for an election at the proper time.²⁸ Accordingly, where a finding in favor of plaintiff or of defendant's counterclaim would necessarily include a finding against the other, a verdict against plaintiff on his petition and against defendant on his counterclaim is not authorized.²⁹ It has been held that there is nothing necessarily inconsistent in a verdict for plaintiff together with an award to defendant on his plea of recoupment.³⁰

Several defendants. Where but one of two defendants sets up a counterclaim, a verdict for both defendants for the excess of the one defendant's separate counterclaim is erroneous.³¹ In an action by several plaintiffs against several defendants, who file counterclaims, a verdict following an instruction, to which no objection was made by the parties, that if the jury find that neither party is entitled to recover, the verdict should be for defendants, a general verdict for defendants is sufficient to dispose of all the issues.³²

In reconvention the verdict should pronounce on the respective rights or actions of both parties;³³ but where the claim in reconvention grows out of the very matter on which plaintiff's right of action is based, and a verdict in favor of one is a verdict against the other, separate verdicts are not necessary.³⁴

On a plea of payment a general verdict may be found for plaintiff for the amount found due after deducting all payments admitted or proved;³⁵ and in assumpsit, on a plea of nonassumpsit and payment, a finding that defendant did assume and promise, without any express finding as to the plea of payment, is a good verdict;³⁶ but where there were pleas of payment and set-off a finding simply that defendant had not paid is not sufficiently responsive and will be set aside.³⁷

Cross claims as between defendants. Under a statute providing that a controversy between defendants shall not delay a judgment to which plaintiff is entitled, where plaintiff has established his case against two or more defendants a verdict for plaintiff is not impaired by the failure of the jury to render a verdict on a cross claim by one defendant against another.³⁸

§ 505. — Applicability and Sufficiency of Evidence

It is commonly held that where several counts, issues, or theories are submitted to the jury the general verdict will stand if the evidence on one count, issue, or theory is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

In some jurisdictions where a case is submitted on a declaration containing several counts³⁹ or causes of action,⁴⁰ or on several issues⁴¹ or theories,⁴² a general verdict for plaintiff cannot be sustained where all such counts, issues, or theories are not supported by the evidence; but where all of the counts, causes of action, or theories are supported by the evidence the jury can return a general verdict in a lump sum without designating how much was found on each count.⁴³ However, it is more commonly held that, in the absence of a request for an instruction that the jury bring in a separate verdict on each count,⁴⁴ or motion for a directed verdict on each count,⁴⁵ where several counts, issues, or theories are tried and submitted to the jury, the general verdict will stand if the evidence on one count, issue, or theory is sufficient to sustain the verdict,⁴⁶ unless when separate and distinct

Sufficiency of evidence as to each count

Where defendant moves for a directed verdict on each of several counts of declaration and a general verdict is rendered for plaintiff, such verdict can be sustained only if the evidence is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff on each count.—Dillon v. Barnard, 101 N.E.2d 345, 328 Mass. 53.

causes of action different in kind are not alleged in the different counts.⁴⁷

The rule has been held to apply both where the issues are alleged in one count and where the issues are made the subject of separate counts.⁴⁸ Under the same reasoning, where a complaint contains two paragraphs substantially alleging the same cause of action, a verdict for plaintiff will stand if one of the paragraphs is established.⁴⁹ It has been further held that, where an action is based on the alleged violation of several statutes, a general verdict for plaintiff will be sustained if it appears that any one of the statutes was violated.⁵⁰ A general verdict on a petition containing two counts, on only one of which evidence was introduced, will be presumed to be based on that count.⁵¹

Finding for defendant. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵² a general finding for defendant will usually be sustained if the evidence is sufficient to support any of the defenses,⁵³ but not if error is committed in the admission of evidence on any issue.⁵⁴

Submission of issues in conjunctive or disjunctive. Where an instruction is drawn in the conjunctive, and the jury finds for plaintiff, it is enough if only one of the grounds of recovery is actually supported by substantial evidence,⁵⁵ since, in purporting to find for plaintiff on all the grounds hypothesized, the jury necessarily find for him on the ground which has support in the evidence;⁵⁶ but where an instruction submits several issues in the disjunctive or alternative, and the jury do not indicate on which one of the issues submitted they base their verdict, there must be evidence to sustain each of the issues submitted.⁵⁷

Eliminated issue. The evidence must sustain the counts submitted to the jury;⁵⁸ and a verdict cannot be sustained by evidence supporting counts in the declaration which were eliminated before the case went to the jury.⁵⁹

Collateral issue. In the absence of a motion to withdraw collateral issues from the jury, a verdict is justified by sufficient proof of one issue and proof of collateral issues is unnecessary.⁶⁰

§ 506. Amount of Recovery

The verdict should not be for an amount greater than the declaration claims or the evidence shows, nor should it be for less than the amount admittedly due; and a verdict granting a recovery unwarranted by any theory of the case is improper.

A verdict for an amount greater than the declaration claims⁶¹ or, conversely, which is set up by way of counterclaim,⁶² is erroneous, but not necessarily void,⁶³ although it may be set aside unless plaintiff consents to a reduction of the verdict to the amount claimed,⁶⁴ unless the excess is slight, when it may be referred to interest.⁶⁵ Likewise, a verdict for more than the evidence shows the damage to be is erroneous,⁶⁶ unless the excess can be attributed to interest.⁶⁷

A verdict for more than the amount demanded in the complaint is proper where there is also a prayer for a right in future installments, part of which have become due since the filing of the complaint.⁶⁸ A verdict which exceeds the amount of damages alleged in the complaint is not invalid

where it appears that during the trial the parties stipulated that the court might permit plaintiff to amend his complaint to conform to the proof with respect to the damage,⁶⁹ especially where it is apparent that the case was tried on the theory that plaintiff might recover any amount of damage actually proved to have been sustained by him.⁷⁰ A verdict is not excessive which includes an item omitted by inadvertence in the instructions, such item not being thereby abandoned.⁷¹ A verdict for an amount as actual damages and an additional amount for future expenses has been held not too indefinite to be capable of enforcement;⁷² and even though objectionable as to the additional amount the error is cured by remission of the additional sum objected to.⁷³ Where a petition names two different sums a verdict for one of such sums will be regarded as valid and consistent with the petition, since where a petition is ambiguous and capable of two constructions and no demurrer is taken, that construction of the petition will be adopted which supports the verdict.⁷⁴

Insufficient recovery. Where the only issue under the pleadings and evidence is whether a party is to recover a specified sum or nothing, a verdict for less than that amount is improper and will be set aside;⁷⁵ and this is especially so where the parties acquiesce in an instruction to that effect.⁷⁶ A verdict for a less amount than that acknowledged to

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision, where plaintiff in bill of particulars named estimated sum for loss of earning capacity, mental and physical pain and suffering, and effect of injuries on plaintiff's health, and amount of verdict exceeded total of such sums, estimated sums were not binding on jury or court so as to require reduction of verdict.—Yeary v. be due in the pleading is erroneous;⁷⁷ but an admission by defendant that he owed "something like" a certain sum has been held not to render a verdict for a smaller amount void.⁷⁸ A verdict for less than the agreed amount, if plaintiff is to recover anything, is not erroneous when it appears on trial that the sum agreed on was too large due to a mistake in calculation.⁷⁹ Where the declaration is in two counts, a verdict for less than the ad damnum of the writ, but larger than the total in either count, is not erroneous.⁸⁰ Where, according to the issues, if the verdict is for defendant he is also entitled to recover on his counterclaim, a verdict for defendant without granting recovery on the counterclaim will be set aside.⁸¹ It has been held that the fact that the amount of the verdict represented arithmetically the aggregate of some only of the items of plaintiff's claimed damage does not warrant setting the verdict aside,⁸² since, in the absence of specific findings as to the items of damage, the verdict must be deemed to represent plaintiff's damages as fixed by the jury.⁸³

Unwarranted or inconsistent recoveries. A verdict granting a recovery unwarranted by any theory of the case is improper and will be set aside.⁸⁴ A jury will not be permitted to depart from a fixed standard or scale by which the damages should be calculated;⁸⁵ but where no such standard is applicable, and the damages depend to some extent on the opinion of the jury, a verdict for less than the amount claimed is not improper.⁸⁶ Where the court directs a verdict for one of two amounts, a verdict for a third amount cannot stand.⁸⁷ In the absence of statute, a jury cannot return a verdict for plaintiff on one item of alleged damage, and for defendant on another and distinct item of damage, where both items are referable to the same cause of action.⁸⁸ Where the expenses incurred by reason of injuries were allowed to the wife the same expenses could not be recovered or awarded to the husband.⁸⁹ A verdict in a personal injury action awarding recovery of damages for loss of time, past, present, and future, and also awarding damages for permanent bodily disability, has been held not erroneous as an award of "double damages."⁹⁰

Award of punitive damages only. A verdict of a jury awarding no compensatory damages but only punitive damages is defective and will not be permitted to stand,⁹¹ since, as considered in Damages § 118, actual damages are a prerequisite to the recovery of exemplary or punitive damages. Moreover, since in such case the jury by finding the issues in plaintiff's favor necessarily found that some actual damages, at least nominal, had been suffered, the court is required to send the jury back with instructions to correct their verdict.⁹²

Conflicting or unconflicting evidence. Where the evidence is conflicting as to the amount due, if any, the jury may return a verdict for the amount they find to be due,⁹³ and are not bound to award the amount claimed in the pleadings, or nothing.⁹⁴ However, where the evidence would authorize a verdict for the amount claimed by plaintiff or for the sum admittedly due by defendant, a verdict for some other sum has been held to be not sustainable.⁹⁵ Where there is no conflict in the evidence as to the amount recoverable by plaintiff, defendant having neither testified nor denied plaintiff's proof, the verdict is bound to be for the amount so shown.⁹⁶

Joint torts. Where several defendants are sued jointly in tort, the recovery is limited to the damages resulting from the combined acts of all.⁹⁷

Doubt of jury as to liability. Once the jury has determined liability, the fact that they were doubtful as to their correctness in this respect has no bearing on the question of damages assessed.⁹⁸

Instruction limiting special damages. A verdict for the total amount claimed in the petition is not rendered erroneous by an instruction limiting the amount of special damages, where the verdict does not separate special and compensatory damages and there is nothing to show how the damages were allocated by the jury.⁹⁹

§ 507. — Interest

A separate finding of interest is not necessary in a verdict including interest. The effect of verdicts with respect to interest depends on the intention of the jury as expressed in the verdicts.

A separate finding of interest is not necessary in a verdict including interest.¹ In a verdict awarding a certain sum "with interest" it must be certain that the jury intended past interest to be included before the court is justified in adding such amount, otherwise past interest will be deemed to be included in the award.² A verdict for a certain sum "and interest included" has been held to mean that interest from the date of maturity should be added,³ and not to mean that interest up to the date of trial was included.⁴ A verdict for the full amount of plaintiff's claim on a quantum meruit claim should be construed as including interest from the date of the demand for payment thereof.⁵ A verdict awarding damages plus interest on an unliquidated claim with a liquidated set-off plus interest has been held to show that if the past interest was not included in the liquidated amount it was not included in the other.⁶ An award of interest by the jury, where the complaint and evidence warrant it, is proper, although the matter was not referred to in the instructions given by the court.⁷ Statutes with respect to the addition of interest in a verdict govern a trial occurring after the statute became operative, although not in force when the action was brought.⁸

Failure to allow interest. A failure to allow interest on the excess of plaintiff's account over defendant's account is not error when the interest due on defendant's account exceeded that on plaintiff's account.⁹ Moreover, the failure to include interest by mistake or oversight will not render a verdict improper as perverse.¹⁰

Rate of interest. Where the court is to calculate the interest due, the rate of interest is to be whatever the law, or the agreement of the parties, has established.¹¹

Simple or compound interest. Whether the verdict should allow simple or compound interest will depend on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.¹²

Waiver of interest. A verdict assessing damages at a specified sum plus legal interest will be considered merely as a verdict for the amount named,

where plaintiff has waived the question of interest.¹³

§ 508. — Apportionment of Damages

Subject to some exceptions, damages should not be apportioned among joint tort-feasors, although a verdict so doing is generally not void; nor should damages be apportioned among the various elements of damages.

While in some instances in some jurisdictions, under or apart or without reference to statute to that effect, such as the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, the jury may in the proper circumstances appraise the conduct of each of the joint tort-feasors and fix and apportion the relative liability of each,¹⁴ the general and common-law rule is that in the absence of a statute to the contrary, damages cannot be apportioned among joint tort-feasors by a verdict,¹⁵ since the sole inquiry open is what damages plaintiff has sustained, not who ought to pay them.¹⁶ Discrimination according to the relative enormity of the acts of each is not permitted.¹⁷

A several verdict against defendants alleged to be joint tort-feasors is not error as to a defendant who filed a separate plea,¹⁸ since this is responsive

Ky.—McCulloch's Adm'r v. Abell's Adm'r, 115 S.W.2d 386, 272 Ky. 756.

Applicability of rule

The rule requiring allocation of damages is applicable where damage is caused by the several and independent negligent acts of two or more parties, so that it may be found that act of each resulted in some injury and that consequences of their acts are separable.—Mohatt v. Olson, 21 N.W.2d 516, 146 Neb. 764—Faught v. Dawson County Irr. Co., 19 N.W.2d 358, 146 Neb. 274.

Prerequisite negligence stated

Ordinarily, negligence of both parties to action for resulting damages must be found to have contributed to injury sustained by plaintiff as proximate cause or causes thereof before damages may be apportioned according to negligence attributable to each party.—Trammell v. Matthews, 72 S.E.2d 132, 86 Ga.App. 661.

Evidence sufficient to warrant submission

Where there was sufficient evidence before jury in action by truck driver for damages of five hundred fifty-four dollars and ninety-three cents against three motorists who forced truck into ditch, to permit jury to appraise the conduct of each motorist and to undertake, as fairly as practicable, to fix the responsibility of each motorist under the Uniform Contribution Among Tort-feasors Act, jury had right to find that two motorists were liable for two hundred dollars each and one motorist for one hundred fifty-four dollars and ninety-three cents, even though there was no instruction authorizing apportionment of damages, and even though two of the motorists were allegedly execution proof.—Little v. Miles, 212 S.W.2d 935, 213 Ark. 725.

Statute limited to trespassers

The statute providing that, where several trespassers are sued jointly, jury may in their verdict specify particular damages to be recovered of each, has no application to personal injury suits.—Eidson v. Statutes held not to affect rule

(1) The comparative negligence statute does not change rule that where several defendants are shown to be liable as joint tort-feasors, the jury shall assess damages against all of them jointly in one amount.—Gazaway v. Nicholson, 9 S.E.2d 154, 190 Ga. 345.

(2) The statute providing that more than one judgment may be rendered in the same cause does not permit any jury to apportion damages between joint tort-feasors.—Stoewsand v. Checker Taxi Co., 73 N.E.2d 4, 331 Ill.App. 192.

to his separate plea.¹⁹ So also, a verdict for unequal amounts against several defendants under a complaint charging separate and distinct assaults and batteries is proper as responsive to the pleadings.²⁰ In fact, in the case of the several liabilities of a number of persons a single-sum verdict may be held to be improper and erroneous.²¹ However, even in the case of separate actions tried together, it has been held to be improper and beyond the scope of the duties of the jury for the jury to bring in separate verdicts and apportion damages where the jury were not instructed to do so.²²

Cure or correction of apportioned verdict. With respect to the effect of verdicts attempting to apportion damages in violation of the general rule stated above, it has been said that there are four distinct lines of authority.²³ One line holds that the verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted,²⁴ and that a verdict against joint defendants for a total sum and apportioning that sum between defendants will not sustain a joint judgment against both defendants for the total sum.²⁵ Other authority holds that the verdict is not void but merely defective in form, and that the defect is curable.²⁶ Accordingly, the attempted apportionment may be disregarded as surplusage as discussed infra § 509, and defendant permitted to take judgment against all defendants for the total damages awarded.²⁷ A third line of authority holds that plaintiff may elect his best damages, that is, the highest amount awarded against any defendant, and enter judgment therefor against all defendants found liable,²⁸ on the ground that where no punitive damages are claimed plaintiff is entitled to a joint verdict for what the most culpable ought to pay.²⁹ The final line of authority holds that plaintiff may elect which of the defendants he will take judgment against, dismiss as to the others, and have his judgment against the selected one for the amount awarded against him.³⁰ It has also been held that the judge may question the jury as to a verdict apparently apportioning damages and, on finding that the jury intended a joint verdict for the total amount, enter judgment for that sum;³¹ or under certain conditions the verdict may be corrected by the jury itself.³²

Pro rata division of award. A verdict for plaintiff in a stated amount against a number of defendants "share and share alike" has been held invalid as a several verdict as to each defendant for a pro rata part of the amount stated;³³ and the court may order the jury to reconsider such "split verdict" and return a proper verdict.³⁴ However, it is not improper to submit verdicts in the same amounts as to each of the defendants where separate forms of

Verdict held not finding of remote negligence

In action for injuries resulting from contact with high tension power line, fact that jury first awarded forty thousand dollars damages against independent contractor under whose supervision line was located and maintained and only twenty thousand dollars against owner of premises and after further instructions returned a verdict for sixty thousand dollars against both, showed that jury fixed plaintiff's damages at sixty thousand dollars and felt that owner was not guilty of as much negligence as contractor but did not show that jury found owner guilty only of remote negligence which would not support a verdict.—*International Harvester Co. v. verdicts were submitted by the court to the jury under agreement with counsel.³⁵

Employer-employee relationship of defendants. The general rule against verdicts apportioning damages among tort-feasors has been held to be particularly applicable where defendants stand in the relationship of employer and employee;³⁶ and even where, under the circumstances of the particular case, apportionment of damages is permitted a larger verdict cannot be found against the employer than against the employee where the wrongful act was done by the employee.³⁷ However, such apportionment of damages, even with larger damages against the employer, is permissible where the tort could have been committed by the employer through another employee,³⁸ or where the employee in the case was not the sole perpetrator on the part of the employer of the wrong complained of.³⁹ It has also been held, where the rule allowing plaintiff to elect which award he will take prevails, that the larger verdict, whether found against the employer or the employee, might be permitted to stand, at plaintiff's election.⁴⁰

Apportionment of damages among various items or elements. Except as the rule may vary with respect to punitive or exemplary damages as discussed below, it is not required that the various elements or items of damages be separately stated in the jury verdict together with the amount allowed for each;⁴¹ and where the matter is one for the trial judge's discretion his refusal to require the verdict to specify the various elements of the award has been held not to be an abuse of discretion.⁴² In fact it has been held that the jury do not have the right to make a segregation of the amount of general damages in the absence of an instruction that they submit a special verdict.⁴³ Accordingly, in an action for damages to property and for personal injuries, an award of a gross amount of damages in a general verdict is proper, and a segregation of the amounts awarded for personal injuries and for damages to property is not necessary;⁴⁴ but it has been held that a verdict stating the total amount awarded and allocating such sum as between personal injuries and expenses is not necessarily improper.⁴⁵

Separation of exemplary and compensatory damages. It has been held that the general rule against apportioning or separating damages among defendants does not apply to exemplary damages, which may be properly apportioned by the jury,⁴⁶ either according to the relative culpability among the defendants⁴⁷ or their relative financial conditions.⁴⁸ It has also been held that in a proper case a verdict may be rendered allowing a recovery against all defendants for compensatory damages and a further amount against some as exemplary damages.⁴⁹

However, it has also been held that where some of defendants in a single suit are liable only for compensatory damages a recovery cannot be had for a greater amount, and the injured party in one and the same verdict cannot obtain compensatory damages against some of the parties and punitive damages against the others.⁵⁰ Certainly, where all of defendants were actuated by malice, all will be liable for both actual and exemplary damages.⁵¹ Apart from statute it has been held to be the better practice to separate compensatory damages from any exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages assessed as punishment,⁵² and that the jury should be instructed to bring in such a verdict,⁵³ so that each amount can be reviewed without disturbing the other.⁵⁴ However, it has been held that where the plaintiff's right to compensatory damages has been clearly established the fact that the jury failed to assess the actual damages separately will not warrant invalidating such verdict.⁵⁵ Moreover, under some circumstances, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, where both actual and punitive damages are recoverable a general verdict without separation of the kinds of damages is sufficient,⁵⁶ at least in the absence of a request for an instruction distinguishing between actual and punitive damages or requiring a different form of verdict.⁵⁷ Where compensatory or punitive damages can be awarded as to one of two defendants but not as to the other, an award of damages as to both which is not characterized as either compensatory or punitive damages renders the verdict uncertain and insufficient.⁵⁸

Apportionment among plaintiffs. Under a statute requiring the jury to apportion damages among plaintiffs, it has been held that failure of the jury so to apportion the damages, when not prejudicial to defendant, is no ground for reversal as error to defendant,⁵⁹ and that if the total amount of damages awarded in a death action is not excessive defendant cannot complain that the amounts awarded to the different plaintiffs in the apportionment of the damages are excessive.⁶⁰ Apart from statute it has been held proper to send back to the jury for reconsideration and for separate findings a verdict finding a lump sum for several plaintiffs;⁶¹ but it has also been held that plaintiffs are not entitled to have their separate awards segregated, at least not for the purpose of determining costs.⁶²

Apportionment as to cause of damage. If the evidence shows concurring causes producing an aggregate loss, and it appears that defendant was not responsible for one or more causes producing a substantial part of the loss, the jury cannot arbitrarily apportion a part of the proved damages to the causes for which defendant is responsible.⁶³

ing against a stranger to the record for part of the recovery.⁷⁹ Recommendations appended to a verdict otherwise properly deciding the issues of the case may be disregarded as surplusage,⁸⁰ as for example, a recommendation appended to the verdict that plaintiff donate the amount recovered to the Red Cross,⁸¹ or that defendants recognize a moral obligation to compensate plaintiff,⁸² or that defendant assist plaintiff's family,⁸³ or that one of defendant's employees be censured.⁸⁴

A verdict will not be invalidated merely because the jury, through their foreman, after the rendition of the verdict expressed their opinion as to the merits of the case, where such opinion is not at variance with the verdict;⁸⁵ or, where the cause is submitted to the jury on special issues alone, because they returned a general verdict therewith,⁸⁶ or totaled the amount due after finding separately on each cause of action;⁸⁷ or because the jury segregated the various items of damage after finding the total general damages.⁸⁸ As much of the verdict as relates to facts admitted by the pleadings may be stricken.⁸⁹

Superadded words may be disregarded as surplusage only when they are meaningless.⁹⁰ Findings of fact germane to the issues may not be disregarded as surplusage.⁹¹ No part of the verdict, no matter how erroneous on its face, which is essential to make the finding responsive to the issues can be disregarded as surplusage,⁹² nor can part of the verdict be disregarded if the verdict is ambiguous.⁹³

§ 510. Disregard of Instructions

The instructions to the jury, whether or not erroneous, constitute the law of the case, and the jury are required to follow them in making up their verdict.

Proper instructions to the jury constitute the law of the case, and the jury are bound to follow them in making up their verdict,⁹⁴ to the exclusion

Matters beyond province of jury

When a verdict states finding of jury and fixes rights of parties in civil cases, recommendations to the court pertaining to matters beyond province of jury, and solely within province of the court, are mere surplusage.—Hall v. Commonwealth, 143 S.W.2d 495, 283 Ky. 778.

of any extraneous matter or conditions,⁹⁵ and regardless of what the members of the jury may believe the law should be.⁹⁶ It is their duty to take the law as given in the instructions and apply it to the evidence as adduced on the trial, and make their verdict accordingly.⁹⁷ A verdict which does not follow the instructions is contrary to law,⁹⁸ and the court may refuse to receive it,⁹⁹ or it may be set aside.¹ This rule has been held limited to instructions of such character as are plain and unambiguous and leave no room for confusion or misunderstanding on the part of the jury, and hence it has been held that a jury cannot be placed in the position of ignoring or violating the instructions where the charges given at defendant's request were somewhat inconsistent with the rulings of the trial court on the pleadings and with parts of the oral charge.² However, it has also been held that, where it clearly appears that the jury did not comprehend the charge, and brought in its verdict on an erroneous view of law, the verdict will be set aside.³

Since the instructions should be considered as a whole, as discussed supra §§ 430-440, the jury must take the whole charge as the law of the case.⁴

Court is not bound to receive a verdict based on an obvious misapprehension of instructions.—West v. Abney, 219 F.2d 624, 203 Okl. 227.

4. Iowa.—Hall v. Great American Ins. Co. of New York, 252 N.W. 763, 217 Iowa 1005.

It is not for jury to select one part of the charge to the exclusion of another, or to decide whether one part cures or qualifies another, without being instructed so to do by the judge.—Morrison v. Dickey, 46 S.E. 863, 119 Ga. 698—Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Hatcher, 45 S.E. 239, 118 Ga. 278—Potts v. R. F. C., 47 S.E.2d 178, 76 Ga.App. 796—Western & A. R. Co. v. Sellers, 83 S.E. 445, 15 Ga.App. 369.

Consequently, a verdict which does not disregard an instruction when interpreted with the entire charge will not be set aside because it appears inconsistent with an isolated or detached expression, clause, or paragraph.⁵ A verdict is not contrary to the instructions where there is evidence on which under the instructions given the jury is authorized to find the verdict returned,⁶ notwithstanding the judge expressed dissatisfaction at the method of proof when he submitted the issue.⁷ A general verdict for plaintiff for much less than the amount of relief demanded on an unliquidated claim does not necessarily show that the jury did not follow the in-

Incorrect instructions. In some jurisdictions the jury must follow the instructions whether the instructions did or did not correctly state the law,⁹ particularly where the evidence is undisputed.¹⁰ Under this rule, a verdict cannot be supported on a theory of law contrary to that on which the case was submitted to the jury.¹¹ Elsewhere, it has been held that the mere fact that the jury disregarded an incorrect instruction is not a ground for reversing a judgment thereon,¹² particularly where the verdict is plainly justified by the evidence,¹³ and it is

Instructions construed

In Rhode Island

(1) The fact that the jury disregarded an erroneous instruction has been held not a ground for vitiating the judgment, provided they found a verdict which was justified by the evidence.—Butler v. Rhode Island Co., R.I., 68 A. 425.

(2) It has also been held, in an assumption action where the declaration contained a count on express contract and also a quantum meruit count, the evidence tended to support the quantum meruit count only, and the court charged that if the implied contract were proved the full amount sought could not be recovered, that a verdict for the full amount sought could not be supported, since the charge, even though erroneous, was the law of the case and binding on the jury.—Medhurst v. McCrohan, 200 A. 532, 61 R.I. 150.

manifest to the appellate court that justice has been done.¹⁴

Failure to object to instruction. An instruction given without objection, whether right or wrong,¹⁵ has been held to become the law of the case and the jury are bound by it.¹⁶

Immaterial disregard of instructions. It has been held not to be error to disregard an instruction to state in the verdict on which of several counts the verdict is based,¹⁷ and a verdict will not be set aside because it is contrary to instructions which were inapplicable¹⁸ or conflicting,¹⁹ or because the charge as a whole shows that the instruction disregarded was inadvertently given,²⁰ or where under all the circumstances it is more reasonable to assume that the jury forgot the instruction rather than that they purposely disobeyed it,²¹ or where the disregard was merely technical.²² The fact that a verdict is against the evidence and instructions is no ground for reversal where the evidence and instructions relate altogether to an issue not made by the pleadings.²³

Instructions as to damages. If correct instructions are given as to the elements or measure of damage, or the amount of recovery, the jury are required to follow them and are restricted thereto,²⁴ and a departure therefrom constitutes error;²⁵ and the rule has been held applicable even though the charge is erroneous,²⁶ or even though an instruction propounds an improper measure of damages to which the parties assented or to which they did not object.²⁷ Disregard by the jury of an instruction as to the amount of recovery has been held to be cured by a remittitur.²⁸

§ 511. Amendment or Correction by Jury

The jury have the right and the power to correct or change their verdict at any time before it has been finally recorded and they have been discharged.

Although a party litigant has a substantial right in a verdict obtained in his favor,²⁹ a manifest mistake in a verdict may be corrected by proper procedure;³⁰ and as a general rule the jury have the right³¹ and the power³² to correct or change their verdict at any time before it has been finally recorded and the jury have been discharged from

In Ohio

(1) It has been held that a jury should have every reasonable opportunity, before their verdict is put on record and before they are discharged and their relation to the case as jurors has ceased, to alter their verdict in form or substance to conform it to their intention.—Ekleberry v. Sanford, 57 N.E.2d 270, 73 Ohio App. 571.

(2) In an earlier case, however, it was held that a verdict returned by jury could not be changed except as to form.—Landon v. Holzberger, 183 N.E. 446, 43 Ohio App. 434.

and it is usually considered the duty of the court to exercise this power to have the verdict amended or corrected.³⁸ However, it is error for the judge to send the jury back to reconsider its verdict where he believes it is the result of passion, prejudice, partiality, or mistake.³⁹ In a proper case the court may require the jury to correct or amend their verdict whether or not requested to do so,⁴⁰ and with or without the consent of counsel,⁴¹ and even over the objection of counsel.⁴²

The power of the court to require the jury to reconsider their verdict is not limited to a case where the verdict is so unreasonable that, if accepted, it would have to be set aside as against the evidence.⁴³ The jury may be directed to reconsider and amend or change their verdict where it is imperfect;⁴⁴ ambiguous, indefinite, or uncertain;⁴⁵ insensible or incomprehensible;⁴⁶ inconsistent or conflicting;⁴⁷ incomplete;⁴⁸ or where it is otherwise

Reading of verdict

Where jury returns verdict containing a patent ambiguity or defect, it is duty of court at time verdict is read to call jury's attention to such ambiguity or defect so that jury itself may correct its verdict before it is received and judgment entered thereon.—Kalmann v. Kalmann Bros., Mo.App., 182 S.W.2d 458.

Normal proceeding when jury render insufficiently formulated verdict is formal correction by jury under advice of court.—Brand v. Norris, 263 P.2d 456, 121 Cal.App.2d 367.

Duty to scrutinize

It is the duty of the presiding judge, before accepting a verdict, to scrutinize its form and substance to prevent insufficient or inconsistent findings from becoming a record of the court.—Edwards v. Hood Motor Co., 69 S.E.2d 550, 235 N.C. 269.

Court control salutary

The control of the court over the verdict of the jury is limited but salutary, and a mere expression of opinion by the trial court that the verdict is too large or too small may conduce to a desirable result.—Gillette v. Schroeder, 54 A.2d 498, 133 Conn. 682.

Duty to request

If verdict is ambiguous, party adversely affected should request a more formal and certain verdict, and then, if trial judge has any doubts on the subject, he may send jury out to correct verdict.—Fernandez v. Consolidated Fisheries, Inc., 255 P.2d 863, 117 Cal.App.2d 254.

Cal.—Megee v. Fasulis, 150 P.2d 281, 65 Cal.App.2d 94.

In Ohio

In a case, in which it was held that a verdict could not be changed except as to form, a verdict manifestly against the weight of the evidence was held not ground for order that jury return to jury room to reconsider case, vacate verdict, and return new one.—Landon v. Holzberger, 183 N.E. 446, 43 Ohio App. 434.

Negligence of all parties

Where jury returned a verdict for plaintiff on his complaint against defendants and assessed his recovery "at none," and it was certain that the jurors were unanimous in their opinion that all parties involved were guilty of negligence and that therefore none was entitled to a favorable verdict, it was proper for trial court to direct jury to return to jury room and return a proper verdict.—Blain v. Yockey, 184 P.2d 1015, 117 Colo. 29.

Correction held sufficient

Where jury, who had been instructed to return separate verdicts, returned verdict against only one of two defendants, the verdict was adequately corrected by verdict denying recovery against the other defendant after direction to jury to retire and find a verdict either for or against him.—Tinsley's Adm'r v. Slate, Ky., 251 S.W.2d 833.

Particular verdicts corrected

(1) In negligence action where jury returned verdict for plaintiff in sum of "no dollars and no cents" instead of verdict for defendant.—Daniels v. Celeste, 21 N.E.2d 1, 303 Mass. 148, 128 A.L.R. 682.

(2) Where jury returned two verdicts, one for each party in equal amounts, instead of a verdict for defendant, as required by statute where the demand of defendant equals the claim of plaintiff.—Butler v. Walton, 56 So.2d 369, 36 Ala.App. 819, certiorari denied 56 So.2d 379, 267 Ala. 714.

Reconsideration by jury required

Where jury returned verdict for punitive damages only, trial judge should have rejected verdict and told jury that their finding was contrary to instructions and should have instructed them more fully and directed them to deliberate further, and action of trial judge in directing jury foreman to strike "as punitive damages awards costs⁶⁵ or attorney's fees;⁶⁶ fixes the recovery in an amount unsupported by any evidence;⁶⁷ seeks to apportion the damages between joint defendants;⁶⁸ does not assess the amount of recovery where it should have been assessed,⁶⁹ or does not award adequate damages;⁷⁰ does not compute⁷¹ or include⁷² interest, or specify the date from which it shall be allowed;⁷³ or seeks to compel defendant to do a specific act when only damages can be awarded.⁷⁴ However, in some jurisdictions it is held that when the verdict of a jury is in proper form, is duly signed by their foreman, and represents the final agreement of the jury, it should be received and entered by the trial court, and not sent back for amendment or further consideration, even though it was reached on incorrect grounds.⁷⁵

It has been held that when the jurors are sent back to amend their verdict, they may alter it in substance and bring in an entirely new verdict, as well as correct a mistake in form or make plain an ambiguity.⁷⁶ The denial of an oral request, made after the verdict is returned, that the jury be required to retire to the jury room and itemize the verdict is not improper.⁷⁷ A substitute judge, who by stipulation of the parties is authorized to receive a sealed verdict and take all action necessary in connection with the reception, may not in effect direct a verdict by instructing the jury to reform their verdict in a particular way.⁷⁸

Effect of reconsideration or change of verdict.

Where the jury have been sent back to correct a verdict which has not become final and the jury, on reconsidering, are unable to agree on a verdict, and are, therefore, discharged, the original defective verdict cannot be accepted and treated as the verdict of the jury;⁷⁹ and after the court has permitted the jury to retire and return a changed verdict it is error for the court to reject this verdict and enter judgment on the verdict first returned,⁸⁰ since the verdict subsequently returned may properly be accepted and used as the basis for judicial action,⁸¹ unless the second verdict is in some manner defective.⁸² If the first verdict is entirely correct and proper, but the trial court rejects and has the jury render a second verdict in accordance with an erroneous instruction as to the law, the appellate court, on holding the second verdict erroneous, cannot accept and act on the verdict the jury first attempted to return.⁸³

Presence of counsel. The court may direct the jury to amend or correct their verdict even though counsel are absent from the courtroom at the time.⁸⁴

Instructions. Where the court requires the jury to reconsider and amend or change the verdict, it is proper for the court to inform them why they are so returned,⁸⁵ and they should be sent out under appropriate and, if necessary, additional instructions.⁸⁶ However, care should be taken by the trial judge to avoid any influence on the deliberations of the jury as to matters exclusively within their province,⁸⁷ and the court may not tell the jury what their verdict shall be.⁸⁸ Where the verdict is sufficient as to substance but incorrect as to form, it is error for the court to direct the jury to correct the verdict in such a manner as to cause them to believe it was incorrect in substance as well as in form, and hence to return a substantially different

Law of case

In replevin for cattle, instruction, after verdict was returned, to raise damages for depreciation of cattle a specified amount above that found by the jury was improper, since original instruction at conclusion of trial that such damages were for jury's determination, not objected to by plaintiff, constituted law of case on issue of damages.—Irick v. Instructions held proper Trial judge's statement that he would let jury retire to reconcile verdict before accepting it was held not to indicate what the verdict should be.—Baird v. Ball, 168 S.E. 667, 204 N.C. 469.

Might to return same verdict

(1) The extent to which a trial court shall instruct a jury as to their right to persist in a verdict after reconsideration depends on the circumstances of each case. Where there may be a reasonable difference of opinion, the court should be careful not to give the impression to the jury that they must return a different verdict and should make it clear to them that it is their right to persist in that first returned.—Barbieri v. Pandisio, 163 A. 469, 116 Conn. 48.

(2) On the other hand, if the verdict first returned is so clearly unreasonable that the trial court would be bound to set it aside, the jury have failed to perform their duty and the court would be justified in pointing that out to them; and in such case the trial court is not under an obligation expressly to instruct the jury that after reconsideration they may return the same verdict, but it does its full duty if it leaves it open to them to do so.—Barbieri v. Pandisio, supra.

(3) Instruction held not to preclude jury from bringing in second verdict in the same amount as the first.—Goldberg v. Gintoff, 20 A.2d 114, 112 Vt. 43—64 C.J. p 1092 note 40 [a] (3), (4).

verdict.⁸⁹ Where the jury are required to reconsider their verdict on the question of the adequacy of the damages awarded, the court may assume from the first verdict that the jury have finally settled the issue of liability and confine its instructions solely to the question of adequacy of the damages awarded.⁹⁰

§ 513. — After Sealing or Recording of Verdict and Discharge or Separation of Jury

In general a jury may amend and correct their verdict, or be ordered so to do by the court, at the time it is returned or announced in open court and before it has been received and recorded and the jury discharged from the case; but after the verdict has been received and the jury discharged it cannot ordinarily be amended and corrected.

In general a jury may amend and correct their verdict, or be ordered so to do by the court, at the

Motion

When the verdict is merely informal or indefinite but not as clear as may be desired, complaining party should enter motion to have jury extend or reform verdict before jury is discharged, otherwise question will be deemed to have been waived.—Fritz v. Roberts, 94 S.W.2d 1016, 264 Ky. 418.

Import and intent of verdict

Where jury had published their verdict and dispersed and the court on the following day reassembled the jury and questioned them as to intent of their verdict, expressions of the jury could not add to or change import and intent of the verdict and could not modify unequivocal finding in favor of two of defendants.—Ryner v. Duke, 53 S.E.2d 362, 205 Ga. 280.

Recording and discharge

(1) Fact that verdict has been announced and entered in minutes of the clerk is not that recording which makes announcement and clerical act the fixed and unalterable verdict of the jury.—Savko v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., 1 N.Y.S.2d 489, 166 Misc. 84.

(2) A verdict is not finished or perfected by the mere entry, but clerk of court further puts query "Gentlemen of the jury, is that your verdict?" and, if there is no dissent, clerk concludes "So say you all" and, no question being made by court or parties, jurors are discharged, and then verdict becomes fixed legal fact.—Savko v. Brooklyn & Queens Transit Corp., supra.

Remedy

After case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict has been rendered, accepted, and filed at the direction of the trial court and the jury discharged from the case, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient and not covering the issues submitted, or if it is against the law, is by a timely and proper motion for a new trial based on such grounds.—Fauver v. Wilkoske, 211 P.2d 420, 123 Mont. 228, 17 A.L.R.2d 518.

Form or substance

charge a short time previous has been held not to prevent the court from recalling the jury before they have completely dispersed or separated and having them amend the verdict as to formal matters⁹⁹ or matters as to which there is no dispute,¹ or designate which of two incompatible and contradictory forms of verdict express their true finding.² Also, after discharge the court may require the jury to amend and correct their verdict where the sole purpose of the amendment is to have the verdict dispose of an issue as to which the court has previously directed a verdict in favor of one party,³ or where the verdict, as orally pronounced and recorded, is correct both in form and substance and the jury are reassembled after discharge simply to correct a formal defect in their written return.⁴

It has been held in a number of jurisdictions that a previous separation of the jury will not deprive them of their power to amend or change the verdict as to matters of form,⁵ and the court may, after separation, reassemble the jury and direct them to make such an amendment or change.⁶ According to some authorities even changes in substance can be made if the separation is not too long and it does not appear that the jurors were subjected to outside influences in the meantime;⁷ but, where they have been dismissed and separated and such time has elapsed that an opportunity has been afforded for them to be influenced by conversation with the parties or others, they may not

Sealed verdict. It has been held that, even though the jury seal their verdict and then separate, they retain the power to amend and change their verdict until it is recorded and they are discharged from the case;⁹ and until that time the court may direct them to amend or change their verdict as to formal or clerical matters,¹⁰ and, in some jurisdictions, also in matters of substance.¹¹ However, in other jurisdictions, particularly where the sealing is equivalent to a rendition and recording of the verdict¹² where the jury have returned a sealed verdict and have separated, they may not be permitted thereafter to amend or change their verdict in matters of substance,¹³ at least where they have been so long separated as to have had ample opportunity to mingle indiscriminately with the public.¹⁴ After the jury have returned a sealed verdict and have been discharged from the case and separated, the trial court is without power to reassemble them and have them reconsider an alleged ambiguous verdict, or to bring in a new verdict.¹⁵

§ 514. — Place of Making Amendment or Change

Amendments to, or changes in, the verdict, particularly as to matters of form, may be made by the jury in open court; but it is proper for the jury to retire to amend or change the verdict, and in some jurisdictions

they should retire where the change or amendment directed by the court relates to a matter of substance.

Amendments to, or changes in, the verdict, made by the jury in open court, have been held not improper,¹⁶ particularly amendments to, or changes of, form.¹⁷ The jury, however, may properly retire to amend or change the verdict,¹⁸ and it has been held that if a change or amendment directed by the court relates to a matter of substance, the proper course is to have the jury retire for further deliberations, with proper instructions.¹⁹

§ 515. Amendment or Correction by Court

Generally, the court has the power to put a manifestly irregular or defective verdict in such form as to make it conform to the intention of the jury, and carry their findings into effect, where the intention can be ascertained with certainty.

While the court has no power to look into the evidence and revise or amend the verdict as to a finding of fact,²⁰ or in any manner to invade the province of the jury by substituting or adding the conclusion or verdict of the court as to a substantial or material matter,²¹ there are numerous cases to the effect that the court has the power to put a manifestly irregular or defective verdict in such form as to make it conform to the intention of the jury, and carry their findings into effect, where the intention can be ascertained with certainty,²²

from statements of the jurors themselves,²³ the notes of the trial judge,²⁴ data given in the verdict,²⁵ or any other clear and satisfactory evidence appearing in the record or the minutes of the trial;²⁶ but the court cannot properly modify or reform the verdict to effectuate the intention of the jury where there is no certain and unmistakable data by which the court can determine that intention.²⁷

Where the court has directed a verdict of a certain tenor, but the verdict returned by the jury does not conform to the direction or intention of the court, it is usually held that the court can amend the verdict to make it conform.²⁸ The court may strike from the verdict portions thereof which purport to deal with matters outside the province of the jury,²⁹ unless the omission of the stricken portion will give the rest of the verdict an entirely different effect from that which the jury probably intended.³⁰ It has been held that if there is no formal or clerical error, and the verdict is one apparently intended by the jury, although in disregard of the instructions, the court cannot substitute its verdict for that of the jury to make it conform to the instructions,³¹ and the action of the court in correcting a verdict returned in disregard of instructions should be undertaken with great caution;³² but there is authority to the effect that the court may amend the verdict to make it conform to the instructions,³³ especially where the jury consent.³⁴ The verdict of a jury based on an erroneous instruction cannot be corrected by the court.³⁵

The trial court has great discretion in amending verdicts,³⁶ and where the court has power to amend the verdict, the particular mode of doing it is discretionary.³⁷ Where the jury's intention is ascertainable, the court may sometimes correct matters of substance to make the verdict conform to the jury's intention.³⁸ Where the evidence on an essential element of the case is uncontradicted, it has been held that the court may correct the verdict so as to conform to such uncontradicted evidence.³⁹ Under a statute so providing, the court has no power to correct or alter the verdict of the jury without the assent of the jurors before their discharge.⁴⁰

thority in the premises as his predecessor the verdict may be amended by a judge who succeeds to the one who tried the case and before whom the verdict was rendered;⁴¹ but it has been said that after a verdict has been recorded and the jury discharged a motion to amend the verdict should be made to the court before which the case was tried.⁴² There are cases which contain the implication that amendment or correction of the verdict is solely the function of the trial court;⁴³ but it has been held within the power of the appellate court to correct defects in form.⁴⁴

§ 516. — Time of Amendment or Correction

As a general rule the court cannot make an amendment or correction as to a matter of substance after the verdict has been recorded and the jury discharged.

While it has been held that a verdict may be amended with respect both to matters of form and substance during the term,⁴⁵ as a general rule the court cannot make an amendment or correction as to a matter of substance after the verdict has been recorded and the jury discharged;⁴⁶ but the discharge of the jury does not deprive the court of its power to amend or correct with respect to clerical errors or formal matters,⁴⁷ and this may be exercised even at a term subsequent to that in which the verdict was rendered,⁴⁸ although it has been held that the power to amend is exhausted after the term ends.⁴⁹ It is the better practice to mould the verdict before the jury is discharged,⁵⁰ although it may be done later when the meaning is clear;⁵¹ and the power of the courts to amend is not confined to corrections made at the time the verdict is rendered.⁵² However, it is only in exceptional cases that the court may, after recordation of the verdict and discharge of the jury, mould or amend

Jury held not discharged

Where it was stipulated that verdict might be rendered in absence of judge, and on return of verdict to clerk of court jurors were permitted to leave courtroom without being requested to return, but about two hours later were called back to courtroom to explain their verdict, jury had not been discharged prior to giving explanation, and therefore, in view of fact that result of jury's deliberation clearly appeared, no prejudice to unsuccessful litigant's right to fair trial resulted when judge recalled jury on next term day and entered judgment in accordance with their reiterated explanation of their verdict, notwithstanding apparent irregularities incident to rendering and receipt of jury's verdict.—*Standard Oil Co. v. the verdict,⁵³ and such power is rarely, if ever, exercised, unless to make the corrected verdict conform to the obvious intention of the jury.⁵⁴ A directed verdict may be amended to conform to the intention of the court even after it has been recorded, judgment rendered, and the time for appeal has expired.⁵⁵ An error in the verdict which is merely a perpetuation of an error previously made in the pleadings cannot be corrected after the expiration of the time within which the pleadings can be amended, since this would destroy the conformity between the pleadings and the verdict.⁵⁶

§ 517. — Amendment or Correction as to Particular Matters

- a. Designation of parties
- b. Several counts or issues
- c. Amount of recovery, interest, and attorney's fees

a. Designation of Parties

The court may amend a verdict to correct a mere clerical error in the designation of the parties, at least where the intention of the jury is clear.

Where it is uncertain which of several defendants the verdict was intended to be against, the court cannot correct the substance of the verdict by adding the name of a defendant shown to be liable under the evidence;⁵⁷ nor can the court amend a verdict for joint plaintiffs by striking the name of one of them and remitting one half the verdict,⁵⁸ or reform a joint verdict against several defendants by limiting it to a particular defendant;⁵⁹ but where all the parties understand that the case is being tried against several defendants, and it is clear that the verdict was intended to be against all defendants, but through clerical error and inadvertence the written verdict names only one defendant the court may amend the verdict to conform to the facts.⁶⁰ If the jury have returned two incompatible verdicts, one which designates plaintiff as the victor and the other defendant, the court may recall the jury and on ascertaining that they intended to find for a particular party may record the verdict as for that party.⁶¹ Where it is undisputed that plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount claimed, subject only to the deduction of the amount established by defendant on his set-off, and the jury return a verdict for defendant for a specified sum on his set-off, without making a finding for plaintiff, the court may correct the verdict to make it one for plaintiff for the difference between the amount found for defendant on his set-off and the amount to which plaintiff was otherwise entitled.⁶² Under a statute requiring separate verdicts for plaintiffs, where the jury return a single verdict the court may mould the verdict in accordance with the undisputed proof so as to prevent injustice.⁶³

Where a verdict is against one or some of the defendants with no finding as to a codefendant, if the intention of the jury is clear the court may amend the verdict so as to include a specific finding for the codefendant.⁶⁴ The court may delete a verdict of two of three defendants, where it is manifestly right,⁶⁵ and such action does not impair the verdict as to the remaining and responsible defendant.⁶⁶ Where a joint verdict against several defendants is improper, such verdict may be amended to consist of separate verdicts against each defendant for the full amount of the joint verdict.⁶⁷ The court may refuse to amend a verdict against one defendant so as to include a verdict for a

Corporate and individual defendants

(1) Where jury return verdict for plaintiff against corporate defendants but not against individual defendants, court may correct error in improperly recording verdict in favor of individual defendants.—Rush v. Jagels

"A Fuel Corp.", 35 N.Y.S.2d 861, 364 App.Div. 535.

(2) In tort action against corporate defendant and two individual defendants, verdict for plaintiff against corporate defendant but not against individual defendants was not final with respect to individual defendants, where plaintiff's counsel at time of rendition of verdict was in doubt as to finding of jury with respect to individual defendants, and requested trial court to determine jury's intention.—Rush v. Jagels "A Fuel Corp.", supra.

codefendant.⁶⁸ Where plaintiff brings an action against defendant individually and as a fiduciary, but voluntarily dismisses as to defendant individually, a verdict will not be amended to enter judgment on the verdict against defendant individually.⁶⁹ It has been held that if the verdict plainly and unequivocally designates the party in whose favor it is rendered the court cannot change it into a verdict for the other party because the jury by mistake designated the party other than the one for whom they intended to render the verdict;⁷⁰ but where the jury first state that they find for plaintiff and then proceed to assess "defendant's" damages at a certain sum, it being apparent that the jury intended to assess plaintiff's damages, the court may correct the verdict by substituting the word "plaintiff's" for "defendant's."⁷¹

If a general verdict is returned in an action involving several counts the verdict may be altered so as to apply to any one count supported by the evidence, or on which it is ascertained that the jury intended to base their verdict.

If a general verdict is returned in an action involving several counts the verdict may be altered so as to apply to any one count supported by the evidence,⁷² or on which it is ascertained that the jury intended to base their verdict.⁷³ If one of several counts is bad the verdict cannot be amended to apply to the good count only,⁷⁴ and there can be no amendment if it appears that there was any evidence exclusively applicable to a bad count.⁷⁵ The verdict may not be amended to apply to one of several inconsistent counts where the evidence, although such as to warrant a verdict on the count to which it is sought to be applied, is equally applicable to all counts.⁷⁶

A verdict expressly based on several counts cannot be limited by the court to a particular count.⁷⁷ Where one of the issues in the case is defendant's right to recover on a counterclaim and the jury return a general verdict for plaintiff, with no express finding as to the counterclaim, the court may amend the verdict to show that the jury found against defendant on his counterclaim either where the jury inform the court they intended so to find,⁷⁸ or where the jury have been instructed that if plaintiff should recover defendant could not recover on his counterclaim.⁷⁹ Where certain issues are tried by the court and others by the jury the court may amend the verdict of the jury to include the findings of the court on the issues tried before it.⁸⁰

c. Amount of Recovery, Interest, and Attorney's Fees

- (1) In general
- (2) Increasing amount of recovery
- (3) Reduction of amount of recovery

(1) In General

Generally, where the jury have failed to insert in the verdict the amount of recovery, and it is impossible definitely to ascertain the amount intended to be allowed, the court cannot fix the amount of recovery; but clerical or formal errors in the statement as to the amount of recovery may be corrected.

As a general rule, where the jury have failed to insert in the verdict the amount of recovery, and it is impossible definitely to ascertain the amount intended to be allowed, the court cannot fix and insert the amount of recovery;⁸¹ but it has been held that, where there is no dispute as to the amount of recovery,⁸² or it is so indicated by the pleadings and evidence that it can be clearly and certainly ascertained by what is simply a process of mathematical calculation,⁸³ a verdict for plaintiff which does not give the amount of recovery may be corrected by an insertion of the amount, even after the jury have been discharged.⁸⁴ Clerical or formal errors in the statement as to the amount of recovery may be corrected, and the verdict put in such form as properly to express the intention of the jury, where the intention of the jury with respect thereto is clearly ascertainable.⁸⁵

Correction of apportionment or failure to apportion damages. If the intention of the jury is clear but they have improperly sought to apportion damages between joint defendants the court, on determining what the jury intended as the total amount of plaintiff's damages, may correct the verdict by making it a joint one against each defendant for the full amount of damages assessed.⁸⁶ Where an instruction is given not to apportion damages, a verdict failing to apportion damages cannot be impeached.⁸⁷

Apportionment or itemization of amount. Where, on a trial of right of property in specified articles, the jury return a verdict in gross for all the articles the court cannot amend the verdict by assessing the value of each article separately.⁸⁸

(2) Increasing Amount of Recovery

As a general rule where the determination of the amount of recovery is exclusively within the province of the jury the court has no power to amend the verdict by increasing the amount found by the jury.

As a general rule where the determination of the amount of recovery is exclusively within the province of the jury the court has no power to amend the verdict by increasing the amount found by the jury;⁸⁹ and it has even been held that a verdict for less than the amount required by the instructions cannot be amended by making an increase to what the jury were instructed to find;⁹⁰ but there are other cases holding that where the court has⁹¹ or could have⁹² instructed a verdict for a certain sum, or where the undisputed evidence shows that the prevailing party is entitled to at least a certain sum,⁹³ or where the determination of the proper amount is simply a matter of mathematical calculation based on the undisputed facts,⁹⁴ and the jury return an inadequate verdict for a lesser sum the court may amend the verdict by increasing the amount of recovery to the proper sum.

should,⁹⁶ amend the verdict by computing and adding interest where it is clear that interest should be included and the court has sufficient data on hand to make the computation of the interest a matter of mere mathematical calculation. On the other hand, the court cannot add interest if it does not have sufficient data from which it can be calculated with certainty,⁹⁷ if there is a possibility that the jury have already allowed interest in the amount of recovery fixed in the verdict,⁹⁸ if the court failed to instruct the jury to allow interest,⁹⁹ if there is, under the pleadings and the evidence, a question of fact for the jury as to whether or not interest has previously been paid,¹ or if there is nothing to show that the jury intended to allow interest where its allowance is a matter for their determination;² and there are cases to the effect that the addition of interest is a substantial change which cannot be made after the verdict has been received and the jury discharged,³ or after the expiration of the term.⁴ It has been held that a failure to calculate interest is a defect in form which the court may correct with the consent of the jury under a statute so providing.⁵

Addition of attorney's fees. Where in a suit on a promissory note, which contains a promise to pay attorneys' fees but does not specify the amount thereof, the jury return a verdict for principal and interest but fail to include attorney's fees the court cannot amend the verdict by fixing and adding the amount of the attorney's fees;⁶ but the court may,⁷ and should,⁸ assess and add attorneys' fees where it is clear that plaintiff is entitled to them and the amount can be readily determined from data given in the note and in the verdict.

(3) Reduction of Amount of Recovery

The general rule is that where the verdict, because of inadvertent mistake, or error in calculation, exceeds the amount claimed or proved the court may, with the consent or acquiescence of the prevailing party, reduce the verdict to the proper amount.

Generally the court has power to reduce a verdict,⁹ as where the verdict exceeds the amount claimed¹⁰ or is occasioned by a mere error in addition;¹¹ and while it has been held that an excessive verdict may not be reduced where the excessiveness is due to the lack of evidence to sustain the finding of the jury rather than inadvertence, error of law, misapprehension of facts, or errors of computation,¹² other cases have permitted a reduction of the amount of recovery where it is excessive in view of the evidence.¹³ An amount improperly allowed as interest may be deducted.¹⁴ While the prevailing party cannot obtain an entirely new and different verdict under the guise of an amendment simply because the ultimate effect would be to reduce the amount given by the jury in their verdict,¹⁵ it is quite generally held that where the verdict, because of inadvertent mistake, or error in calculation, exceeds the amount claimed or proved the court may, with the consent¹⁶ or acquiescence¹⁷ of the prevailing party reduce the verdict to the proper amount. In a number of cases where only the defeated party was complaining, lack of consent or acquiescence of the prevailing party has been held not to render improper the deduction of manifest and determinable excesses.¹⁸

It is often stated quite broadly that the court may reduce an excessive verdict due to an obvious error in calculation without the consent of the prevailing party where the matter is susceptible of accurate mathematical calculation and involves no consideration of, or opinion on, the evidence,¹⁹ and some cases have sustained reductions to the amount claimed in the pleadings without the consent of the prevailing party;²⁰ but it is the general rule that where the damages are unliquidated the court cannot, without the consent or acquiescence of the prevailing party, invade the province of the jury by reducing the amount of the verdict.²¹ Where the proper amount is apparent, the trial court, in some jurisdictions, may correct the verdict by striking off the excess.²² Where, from the itemization of damages, it is apparent that a double recovery has been allowed, the duplicated elements may be stricken.²³

After the discharge of the jury it has been held that the court cannot reduce the amount of recovery.²⁴ Where the evidence sustains the award made by the jury the verdict should not be reduced.²⁵

Excess on one count or item. Where the suit is based on two causes of action and the verdict allows plaintiff more than he asked for on his first cause of action, but fixes the recovery on the second cause at considerably less than could have been allowed, the court is without power to amend by making a general verdict for the total of the two sums, which the evidence would have justified on both causes of action, but the amount allowed on the first cause of action must be reduced to the amount claimed by plaintiff.²⁶

Inconsistent reduction. Where the basis on which the court reduces the amount of the verdict would legally require that the entire verdict be set aside, the inconsistency of the court in reducing the verdict in part and leaving the other part to stand requires a reversal.²⁷

§ 518. Amendment or Correction by Attorneys and Others

Formal defects in the verdict may be amended or corrected by the attorneys under the direction of the court.

Formal defects in the verdict may be amended or corrected by the attorneys under the direction of the court.²⁸ A defective verdict cannot be corrected by the reporter, in his report of the case, stating the finding of the jury in such a way as to eliminate the defect.²⁹ A court clerk cannot amend or correct a verdict,³⁰ and cannot, without the knowledge of the court or the party adversely affected, and after the trial has terminated, alter or change the verdict as recorded in a material respect;³¹ but where by statute the jury have nothing to do with the interest, but it is to be added by the clerk, the clerk may add the interest although the jury in making up their award in fact included interest.³²

§ 519. Venire De Novo or Venire Facias De Novo

The terms "venire de novo" or "venire facias de novo" are now used interchangeably in practice to denote the submission of the case to another jury for a new trial.

A "venire facias de novo," commonly termed a "venire de novo," is a second "venire" to summon another jury for a new trial.³³ The terms "venire de novo" or "venire facias de novo" are now used interchangeably in practice to denote the submission of the case to another jury for a new trial.³⁴ Venire de novo was one of the early common law remedies for obtaining a reexamination of the facts tried by the jury,³⁵ which antedated motions for a new trial.³⁶ Venire de novo can be used only where the defect in the verdict appears on the face of the record,³⁷ and it embraces an improper or unauthorized verdict.³⁸ Also, venire de novo can be used only where there is a defective verdict,³⁹ and it cannot be based on the refusal of the court to have the jury return a special verdict,⁴⁰ or its allowance of an amendment of the complaint to conform to the evidence.⁴¹

There is proper ground for a venire de novo if the verdict is so defective on its face that a judgment cannot be rendered thereon,⁴² if the court

makes a ruling accepting a verdict defective in form,⁴³ or if the verdict fails to find on all the issues between plaintiff and defendant,⁴⁴ although as to the latter a distinction is judicially recognized between general verdicts and special verdicts or findings.⁴⁵ A venire de novo is granted when the verdict is imperfect by reason of some uncertainty or ambiguity,⁴⁶ or for failure to assess damages.⁴⁷ It is usually held that venire de novo will not lie if the verdict finds on all the issues and is not so defective that judgment cannot be rendered on it,⁴⁸ although the verdict is formally somewhat insufficient,⁴⁹ or contains unnecessary and immaterial matters which may be rejected as surplusage.⁵⁰ A motion for a venire de novo is properly overruled where the verdict is not subject to the claimed imperfections or defects.⁵¹

Contents and construction of motion. A motion for a venire de novo must sufficiently set forth or disclose the grounds on which it is made.⁵² Although a motion is termed by the movant as a motion in arrest of judgment it will be treated and considered as a motion for a venire de novo where it is directed to the verdict alone, and the remedy sought is unmistakably that which can only be had by a motion for a venire de novo.⁵³

may be granted at any time before final judgment,⁵⁴ a motion made after the time is too late and will be overruled;⁵⁵ but although a judgment has been rendered against one defendant a motion for a venire de novo, which seeks relief as to other defendants, is timely if filed before the judgment is rendered for the other defendants, which judgment is the final judgment in the cause.⁵⁶

§ 520. Entry and Record

Before a verdict is complete, it must be accepted by the court for record. The record of a verdict in case of clerical mistake may be amended to conform to the verdict as rendered.

Before a verdict is complete, it must be accepted by the court for record.⁵⁷ When a verdict by a jury is returned in open court and received by the court, it should be filed.⁵⁸ It is irregular to record a verdict before it has been declared by the foreman, or, if sealed, read by the clerk.⁵⁹ The court should record the verdict as it is rendered by the jury,⁶⁰ since the recorded verdict is the only verdict to be considered,⁶¹ and the only one that can be looked to by the appellate court.⁶² It is the verdict as recorded which constitutes the actual verdict in the case on which the judgment of the court is based.⁶³ The court has authority to enter on the record a directed verdict in the absence of one or all of the jurors after it announces such direction in the presence of all the jurors.⁶⁴ The form of the verdict as recorded must control in case of variance between it and the written verdict brought into court by the jury.⁶⁵ It is not necessary that the record of entry of a verdict should show that the jury were sworn.⁶⁶ A verdict which the court refuses to receive because of defects is not entitled to be filed under a statute relating to the filing of verdicts.⁶⁷ A verdict is not invalid because entered on the wrong paper,⁶⁸ although under some statutes the verdict must be entered in the minutes of the court.⁶⁹

Entry nunc pro tunc. The court may enter a verdict nunc pro tunc at any time during the term at which it was rendered.⁷⁰

Amendment or correction of record. The record of a verdict in case of clerical mistake may be amended to conform to the verdict as rendered,⁷¹ although the term has expired,⁷² and the court may, after the expiration of the term, direct the recording of a verdict which was not recorded when returned.⁷³ Where, in order to arrive at the intention of the jury in their verdict, it is necessary to consider the evidence which has not been made a part of the record, the court may require the record to be completed by bill of exceptions or bill of evidence.⁷⁴

a. In General

Verdicts are to be construed liberally and reasonably with a view to sustaining the verdict and effectuating the intention of the jury if possible.

General verdicts are to be given a reasonable intendment,⁷⁵ are to have every reasonable presumption or intendment made in their support,⁷⁶ and are to be construed liberally⁷⁷ and reasonably,⁷⁸ with a view to sustaining the verdict and effectuating the intention of the jury if possible. The jury's intent must be ascertained and given effect if consistent with legal principles.⁷⁹ There must, however, be a reasonable basis on which to find what the jury did intend,⁸⁰ and a court must refrain from any encroachment on the exclusive function of the jury by imputing to a verdict a meaning which it is doubtful that the jury intended to impart.⁸¹

If possible, a construction will be given to the verdict which will make it effective rather than void,⁸² and verdicts are not to be avoided unless of necessity.⁸³ A verdict must be construed to avoid a conflict, if it is reasonably susceptible to that construction.⁸⁴ Verdicts are not to be technically construed,⁸⁵ and are not to be strictly construed as are pleadings.⁸⁶ Where a crudely drawn and imperfect verdict is read to the jury according to the interpretation by the trial court thereof, and this is adopted by them as a true reading of their verdict, the trial court may properly accept this interpretation as the true verdict.⁸⁷

The trial court has a right to construe the verdict,⁸⁸ as a question of law,⁸⁹ and such right continues regardless of the lapse of any time to the period within which it would be necessary to interpret the verdict.⁹⁰ In the absence of a motion by one of the litigants, or a request by the clerk, the trial court is not called on to construe the verdict immediately with a view to the entry of judgment.⁹¹ A verdict speaks as of the date of trial.⁹²

Lien. Where a statute so provides, when a verdict is rendered, it becomes a lien on the realty situated within the county of the party against whom it is rendered.⁹³

Use of singular or plural. Under the general rules of construction, words in the plural number may be construed to include the singular, and vice versa, unless an intention to the contrary plainly appears from the context.⁹⁴

b. Construction in Connection with Record and Proceedings

Where the verdict is plain and unmistakable in its terms and legal effect, the jury's intent must be determined from the verdict itself; but, where the intention of the jury is not clearly apparent from the verdict itself, the verdict is to be construed in connection with the record and proceedings.

Where the verdict is plain and unmistakable in its terms and legal effect the jury's intent must be determined from the verdict itself;⁹⁵ but, where the intention of the jury is not clearly apparent from the verdict itself, it is a settled rule of construction that the verdict is to be construed in connection with the admitted facts,⁹⁶ the jury's answers to interrogatories,⁹⁷ and the pleadings.⁹⁸ It is also to be construed in connection with all the evidence which has

c. Issues and Facts Determined by General Verdict

necessary, and issuable fact submitted to the jury in favor of the prevailing party.

As a general rule, if it is not inconsistent with special findings, a general verdict includes a finding of every material, necessary, and issuable fact submitted to the jury in favor of the prevailing party;⁵ but such a verdict establishes nothing with respect to matters or issues not submitted to the jury by the instructions of the court⁶ or involved in the pleadings;⁷ and a verdict for less than is alleged or proved by the prevailing party cannot be considered as establishing the truth of the testimony of his witnesses,⁸ or the allegations of his pleadings,⁹ with respect to the amount of recovery.

d. Conclusiveness

Generally, the verdict of the jury, if not set aside in some legal way, is conclusive on the parties as to the facts found on conflicting and sufficient evidence.

It is a general rule that the verdict of the jury, if not set aside in some legal way, is conclusive on the parties as to the facts found on conflicting and sufficient evidence,¹⁰ and the court will not inquire into them;¹¹ but the verdict is not conclusive as to issues of fact not submitted to the jury under the instructions of the court.¹²

e. Particular Verdicts

- (1) In general
- (2) In favor of plaintiff
- (3) In favor of defendant

(1) In General

A verdict rendered by consent of the parties, and which covers the whole scope of the litigation, is a verdict binding on the parties as to the merits.

A verdict rendered by consent of the parties, and which covers the whole scope of the litigation, is a verdict binding on the parties as to the merits;¹³ and on such a verdict it will be assumed that everything that could have legally been found for the party in whose favor the verdict was taken has been so found.¹⁴ A verdict by consent is deemed at least as favorable to the prevailing party on the facts in issue as would be a verdict found on a submission;¹⁵ but where there are agreed special findings as well as an agreed verdict the verdict may be controlled by the findings.¹⁶ Where the jury return a verdict for plaintiff, and a verdict for each defendant, all of which verdicts provide for no damages but assess part of the costs to the party in whose favor the verdict is returned, the verdicts constitute a finding that none of the parties have made out a case.¹⁷ In a negligence action, a verdict of no cause of action indicates that defendant's negligence was not proved,¹⁸ or that contributory negligence of plaintiff barring recovery was established.¹⁹ A verdict of no cause of action against plaintiff does not impliedly embrace an affirmative finding for defendant on a counterclaim.²⁰

(2) In Favor of Plaintiff

A general verdict for the plaintiff is a finding in his favor on all the issues joined or necessary to sustain the cause of action.

A general verdict for plaintiff is a finding in his favor on all the issues joined or necessary to sustain the cause of action,²¹ or on all the averments

Under statutes

(1) The purpose of statute providing that a general verdict shall be held to embrace every issue joined in a suit is to require the application of general verdict in favor of defendant to such defensive plea of defendant as is supported by evidence, even though there are other pleas not so supported.—Hammons v. Walker Hauling Co., Tenn., 263 S.W.2d 753.

of the complaint material to recovery,²² although it does not necessarily find that plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount alleged to be due,²³ and does not impute a finding not essential to recovery.²⁴ A verdict for plaintiff, although for a nominal or inadequate sum, must be regarded as finding for plaintiff on the issues of liability and right of recovery and cannot be considered as in legal effect a verdict for defendant,²⁵ although it has been held that a verdict in favor of plaintiff for a nominal sum, when the jury know that plaintiff sustained damages in excess of such sum, is a verdict for defendant,²⁶ and that a verdict in favor of plaintiff, failing to give any compensatory or punitive damages, is a verdict for defendant.²⁷ In an action against two defendants, where a verdict is directed for one defendant on one count but not on the other, a verdict for plaintiff is against one defendant on one count and against both defendants on the other.²⁸

A general verdict for plaintiff which does not specify against whom it is found will, where relief has been asked against several defendants, be construed as a verdict against all defendants;²⁹ but if the verdict specifies one or more defendants, and makes no mention of the other defendant or defendants, it will usually be construed as a verdict in favor of the defendant or defendants not mentioned.³⁰ A verdict for plaintiff, which specifies that it is based on one of several counts in the declaration, is in effect a finding for defendant on the other counts not specified;³¹ but a general verdict which makes no specification cannot be construed to have been based on only one of two grounds of negligence invoked by plaintiff.³² Where the only issue is as to plaintiff's right as to a certain property a verdict that "We, the jury, find the right of property to be in the plaintiff," is equivalent to the simple finding of a general verdict in favor of plaintiff.³³

In actions for personal injuries a general verdict for plaintiff is deemed to cover compensation for every element of damage embraced within the pleadings and proof.³⁴ Where such issue is submitted to the jury,³⁵ in a negligence action, a verdict for plaintiff is a finding that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence,³⁶ that he did not assume the risk,³⁷ that one or more of the acts charged in the complaint were the proximate cause of the injury,³⁸ and that defendant was negligent.³⁹ Where, in an action on a contract, the jury return a verdict for plaintiff for less than the contract price, this has been held to establish a finding that plaintiff did not fully perform the contract;⁴⁰ but there is also authority to the contrary.⁴¹

Where the verdict for plaintiff in an action by plaintiff and another is silent as to such coplaintiff, it is presumed that the coplaintiff suffered no damage, where the court charged that such coplaintiff was entitled to damages, if any, if defendant was negligent.⁴²

Where because of ambiguity in the verdict it is doubtful which of two sums was intended to be awarded as damages it will be presumed that the lesser amount was the one intended.⁴³ Where a verdict is against one defendant for one amount and against the other defendant for a like amount, it has been held that the verdict should be construed as being for that amount against both defendants.⁴⁴

(3) In Favor of Defendant

A general verdict in favor of the defendant is a finding of every material, necessary, and issuable fact submitted to the jury in his favor.

A general verdict in favor of defendant is a finding of every material, necessary, and issuable fact submitted to the jury in his favor,⁴⁵ and in a negligence action, that such defendant was not negligent,⁴⁶ although it has been held that a general verdict for defendant implies a finding of negligence against both parties,⁴⁷ and that a finding that one defendant is not liable is not conclusive on the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.⁴⁸ A verdict against several defendants is not determinative of the question of liability as between themselves where such liability was not submitted to the jury.⁴⁹ In an action against several defendants, a verdict in favor of one defendant can be construed solely as a verdict against the other and not against both.⁵⁰

Where defendants plead a set-off and counterclaim to a cause of action, a verdict that the jury finds in favor of defendants on the issues joined does not constitute a finding on the counterclaim.⁵¹ Where defendant has set up a counterclaim, the prima facie meaning of a general verdict for defendant is that defendant's counterclaim equally offsets plaintiff's claim;⁵² and the same construction is given to a verdict which contains one finding in favor of defendant in the main action and another finding in favor of the original plaintiff or defendant on the counterclaim.⁵³ If defendant's counterclaim is for an amount in excess of plaintiff's claim a verdict for defendant for a certain sum is a finding that defendant's claim exceeds plaintiff's by that sum.⁵⁴ It has been held that, if there is a verdict for plaintiff on his claim, a verdict for defendant for nominal damages on his counterclaim may be regarded as in effect a finding for plaintiff on the counterclaim.⁵⁵ Where there is admittedly a certain sum due plaintiff, a verdict "in favor of the defendant" will be construed as denying recovery only as to the excess over the amount admitted to be due;⁵⁶ and if a plea of set-off contains an admission of liability on the main cause of action a verdict, which is limited to a finding for defendant on his set-off, will be considered as, in legal effect, a finding for plaintiff on his cause of action and for defendant on his counterclaim.⁵⁷

§ 523. — Affidavits and Testimony of Jurors to Sustain, Impeach, or Explain

Jurors will not be heard to impeach a verdict duly rendered by them and recorded, and their affidavits introduced for such purpose will be disregarded, although such affidavits are admissible to show that the verdict, by reason of mistake, does not embody the true finding of the jury.

Jurors will not be heard to impeach a verdict duly rendered by them and recorded, and their affidavits introduced for such purpose will be disregarded.⁵⁸ Thus, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁵⁹ jurors cannot impeach their verdict by affidavits or testimony that the verdict was the result of misapprehension⁶⁰ or mistake of fact,⁶¹ or was arrived at by lot, or by averaging estimates;⁶² or to disclose the incompetency or misconduct of their fellow jurors;⁶³ or to show what improper methods they employed to arrive at the verdict;⁶⁴ or what items were allowed or disallowed in computing the amount of the verdict;⁶⁵ or that they did not understand the effect of their verdict;⁶⁶ or that, had the juror known of certain evidence, he would not have rendered the same verdict,⁶⁷ or that improper matters were considered by the jury.⁶⁸

On the other hand, affidavits of jurors are admissible to show that the verdict, as received and entered of record, by reason of a mistake does not embody the true finding of the jury,⁶⁹ or to correct an erroneous statement of the verdict to the court or entry by its clerk,⁷⁰ or to remove an ambiguity,⁷¹ or, where a sealed verdict is returned without specifying the amount of the recovery, to show what they intended to be understood as their verdict.⁷² Where in fact no agreement was reached by the jurors, resulting in the absence of any verdict whatsoever, affidavits by the jurors are competent for the purpose of showing want of assent to the verdict.⁷³ Jurors are competent witnesses for the proof of extraneous facts which may have influenced their conduct,⁷⁴ as, for example, coercion on the part of the bailiff,⁷⁵ or matters which took place outside the court;⁷⁶ but what took place while the jury were kept in the custody of the officer of the court for the purpose of deliberation is not matter outside of court.⁷⁷

While it has been held that affidavits or unsworn statements may not be used to sustain the jury's verdict,⁷⁸ it has also been held that affidavits or evidence of jurors is admissible when made in support of⁷⁹ or to explain a verdict, as, for instance, by showing whether interest was computed on plaintiff's claim.⁸⁰ Informal explanations by the jury can be used to confirm the correctness of the understanding of the court with respect to the verdict.⁸¹

Verdict defective on its face. A verdict evincing on its face a misunderstanding on the part of the jury is self-impeached,⁸² and it is permissible to let in the testimony of the jurors themselves in confirmation of their misunderstanding.⁸³

Less than unanimous jury required. Where, under statutory or constitutional provision, a verdict may be returned by less than a unanimous vote of the jury, the verdict cannot be impeached by any one of the twelve jurors on the jury.⁸⁴

§ 524. — Affidavits and Testimony of Third Persons

The affidavits and testimony of third persons are not sufficient to overcome the verdict.

Affidavits of officers in charge of the jury which show the violation on their part of their sworn duties,⁸⁵ or affidavits of third persons on information and belief that a verdict was arrived at by chance, the verdict having been affirmed by each juror on poll,⁸⁶ or affidavits or testimony of others setting forth the hearsay statements of jurors,⁸⁷ are not sufficient to overcome the verdict. Parol evidence is admissible to show a mistake in the verdict of a jury.⁸⁸

§ 525. Objections and Exceptions

An error or defect in the form of a verdict is waived by the failure to make timely objections, and an objection to a verdict must specify the particulars in which the defect lies.

An error or defect in the form of a verdict is waived by the failure to make timely objections.⁸⁹ Objection to irregularity or informality in a verdict must be taken at its rendition or time of return,⁹⁰ at the term at which the verdict is returned,⁹¹ and before the jury are discharged,⁹² otherwise the objection will be deemed to have been waived. For example, a failure to object at the time of rendition of a verdict to the want of signature,⁹³ or an improper signature,⁹⁴ or the addition of interest to the amount of the verdict,⁹⁵ or the giving of a lump sum verdict,⁹⁶ or error in the amount of a verdict with respect to interest,⁹⁷ or return of a general verdict when a special verdict is requested,⁹⁸ or a single verdict on two causes of action,⁹⁹ or rendition of separate verdicts as to defendants,¹ or a general verdict on separate causes of action,² or the irregularity in recording a verdict before it is announced,³ is deemed a waiver of the ir-

Codefendants

(1) Where verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff against only one driver and employer for death of plaintiff's decedent without mentioning other driver or employer, and all parties assumed that verdict was in favor of driver and employer not mentioned, and plaintiff's attorney did not object to form of verdict or ask that jury reconsider or clarify verdict, but moved to set aside verdict as contrary to the law and the evidence, plaintiff accepted verdict as rendered and could not thereafter question it with respect to form.—Hart v. National Casket Co., 293 N.Y. S. 155, 161 Misc. 728.

(2) A failure to object to the form of verdict does not constitute a waiver of a substantial claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict against one of several defendants.—Stanford v. Richmond Chase Co., Cal., 272 P.2d 764.

(3) Where jury returned verdict against only one of two defendants who answered separately and were silent as to the other, plaintiffs, by not requesting trial court to instruct jury to retire and make their finding with respect to other defendant, merely waived the objection in so far as it might have been effectual as an attack on the verdict returned, and plaintiffs were not estopped to object to jury's failure to find against one of defendants.—Ireland-Yube Gold Quartz Mining Co. v. regularity. A failure to object to a verdict which does not dispose of all issues as to all the parties is a waiver of the defect.⁴ Where defendant consents to an additur by the court to the verdict, he cannot thereafter object thereto.⁵ Under some circumstances a failure to object to the absence of the jury when a sealed verdict is opened is a waiver of the right to poll the jury.⁶

The objection of irregularity should be taken by motion to set aside on that ground,⁷ or by other procedure provided by statute,⁸ and comes too late on a motion for a new trial,⁹ or on appeal.¹⁰ A party who is not injured thereby may not complain of the uncertainty of the verdict or of defects therein;¹¹ but there is authority holding that plaintiff can complain of a verdict granting an insufficient recovery, unwarranted by any theory of the case.¹² Where, under the charge, no recovery was authorized against each of several defendants, save for their own negligence, one defendant may not complain of a finding in favor of a codefendant.¹³ Under a statute requiring separate verdicts in the event of joinder of husband and wife in suit, where a lump sum verdict is rendered, such defect is not waived by a failure to object thereto.¹⁴

Form of verdict given by judge. Objections to the form of verdict furnished the jury by the judge must be interposed at the time.¹⁵

the amount for which each joint tort-feasor is liable instead of finding one amount against both defendants, he may not complain that satisfaction of a judgment entered thereon against one defendant satisfies the judgment against the other.¹⁶

Improper joint verdict. A failure to object to an improper joint verdict for damages against defendants severally liable does not waive the error,¹⁷ but it has been held that, in an action to recover land, where persons whose possessions are separate are joined as defendants, a failure to object to a joint verdict waives the error.¹⁸

Objections to separation of jury. A failure to object to an improper assembly of the jury to make an amendment in the verdict waives the error.¹⁹ Objections that the jury have separated after submission of the cause to them and before reaching a verdict must be made at the first opportunity.²⁰

Invalid verdict. Failure to object to an invalid verdict will not preclude a party from subsequently attacking it.²¹ A failure to poll the jury is not a waiver of the defect in a verdict showing on its face that the required number of jurors did not assent thereto.²²

Failure to object to evidence of jurors. The proposition that the evidence of a juror will not be received to impeach his verdict is founded on the assumption that the opposing party objected to

Issues included in verdict

(1) If all issues are not determined by a verdict, but no objection is made thereto, the verdict stands as to issues included therein, but as to remaining issues the matter is set at large and further proceedings should be had in trial court to adjudicate such issues.—Ireland-Yuba Gold Quartz Mining Co. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 116 P.2d 611, 18 Cal.2d 557.

(2) Where verdict indicated that only issues adjudicated were those raised by cross complaint and answer thereto, plaintiffs who waived error committed with respect to its form did not waive right to have issues raised on complaint subsequently submitted for an adjudication.—Portman v. Keegan, 87 P.2d 400, 31 Cal.App.2d 30.

Failure of counsel to employ procedure under statute providing that if verdict is informal or insufficient. It may be corrected by jury under advice of the court, or jury may be again sent out, constitutes a waiver on part of counsel of all objections, which could have been made because of irregularity, informality, or ambiguity in verdict.—Fischer v. its introduction.²³ If the evidence of a juror is permitted by the opposite party to be introduced without objection, he waives all right to complain,²⁴ although there is also authority to the contrary.²⁵

Correction or reformation of verdict. A party claiming that a verdict should be clarified and reformed should make the request before the jury are discharged,²⁶ and if no objection is interposed as to the form of the verdict until after the jury have been discharged, the court may refuse to construe or correct it.²⁷

Sufficiency and scope of objection. An objection to a verdict must specify the particulars in which the defect lies.²⁸ Thus, an objection that the verdict exceeds the ad damnum is not raised by an objection that the verdict is excessive.²⁹ An exception that the verdict is contrary to law,³⁰ to instructions,³¹ or to the evidence³² is too vague and general, and will not be considered; but an objection that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence is sufficient if it designates some particular material fact and avers that such fact is not sustained by the evidence.³³

C. SPECIAL VERDICTS, FINDINGS, AND INTERROGATORIES

§ 526. Power and Duty of Jury

The power and duty of the jury with respect to special verdicts and special interrogatories or findings are discussed infra §§ 527-528.

§ 527. — As to Special Verdict

At common law, and under statutes which are merely declaratory thereof, the jury in a civil action may in their discretion, return a special verdict; but in some jurisdictions this discretionary power of the jury is limited by statute to actions for the recovery of money or specific property.

At common law, and under statutes which are merely declaratory thereof,³⁴ the jury in a civil action may, in their discretion, return a general verdict, or they may return a special verdict;³⁵ and in the exercise of this discretion they may decline to find other than a general verdict.³⁶ In some jurisdictions this discretionary power of the jury is limited by statute to actions for the recovery of money or specific property;³⁷ but, subject to such limitation as to the nature of the action, it is within the discretion of the jury to return a special verdict.³⁸ Although a special finding may accompany a general verdict, as discussed infra § 528, in the absence of statutory provision the making of a special verdict is not dependent on the jury's first returning a general verdict;³⁹ on the other hand, as a general rule the jury should not render both a general verdict and a special verdict at the same time and in the same action,⁴⁰ and if both are returned by the jury the general verdict must be disregarded.⁴¹

A general verdict is improper in a case submitted for a special verdict⁴² or where a special verdict covers all of the issues of the cause;⁴³ but where a special finding is on a part only of the material facts a general verdict must be returned.⁴⁴ The rendition of a general verdict, however, in addition to a special verdict is not error where they are not inconsistent⁴⁵ or where the general verdict is merely a correct conclusion of law from the special findings.⁴⁶ Where a jury return a special verdict which covers all of the issues in the case, the failure of the court to submit the case to the jury for a general verdict is not improper.⁴⁷ Where the jury are not required to render a special verdict, their unauthorized action in so doing can give no efficacy to the gratuitous findings contained in the verdict.⁴⁸

In some jurisdictions only general verdicts are authorized⁴⁹ and special verdicts have been abolished by statute⁵⁰ or are not authorized by reason of the repeal of the statute by which they were formerly authorized.⁵¹

§ 528. — As to Special Interrogatories or Findings Accompanying General Verdict

turn in connection with a general verdict special findings or answers to special interrogatories on material questions of fact, on which verdict and findings the court may render judgment, and such findings must be so required on the request of either party to the action.

Under the practice or constitutional or statutory provisions in some jurisdictions a jury cannot be required to return special findings in connection with a general verdict;⁵² but, although special findings are not essential to a general verdict,⁵³ it is generally the practice, which in many states has been incorporated into statutes, under which, at the request of parties, the jury may express an opinion distinct from their verdict,⁵⁴ and may be required to return, in connection with a general verdict, special findings or answers to special interrogatories on material questions of fact,⁵⁵ on which verdict and findings the court may render judgment,⁵⁶ and such findings must be so required on the request of either party to the action.⁵⁷ However, such special interrogatories may be submitted or special findings required only in connection with a general verdict,⁵⁸ and the court cannot, in the absence of a general verdict, render judgment on findings in answer to interrogatories⁵⁹ unless the conduct of the parties has been such as to justify the presumption that they have waived a general verdict.⁶⁰ Where special interrogatories have been submitted and not withdrawn, the jury should be required to answer them with the taking of their verdict and before its acceptance.⁶¹ Special findings accompanying a verdict rendered on direction of the court are immaterial.⁶² It has been

It being beyond province of jury to make findings of fact where they return a special verdict and not a general verdict, such findings had no place in the case and trial court could not adopt such findings in its decree, which is part of judgment roll and therefore such findings formed no part of judgment roll.—Harris v. Harris, supra.

Where court in effect denies jury right to return general verdict, it is error to direct that special findings only are to be returned as to the issues.—Shadbolt, etc., Iron Co. v. Camp, 45 N.W. 1062, 80 Iowa 539.

a. As to Special Verdict

- (1) In general
- (2) Propriety and manner of submission

(1) In General

Under the common-law rule and statutes authorizing a jury in their discretion to find either a general or special verdict, the trial court has no power to direct or control the jury as to whether or not they will return either a general or a special verdict; but in many jurisdictions the trial court is vested with discretionary power to submit the case on all or any of the issues and direct the jury to return special verdicts on such issues.

Under the common-law rule and statutes authorizing a jury in their discretion to find either a general or special verdict, the trial court has no power to direct or control the jury as to whether or not they will return either a general or a special verdict;⁶⁴ but in many jurisdictions, either by statutes, which have been held valid,⁶⁵ or by practice or rules of court, where the evidence authorizes the submission of the case to the jury, the trial court is vested with discretionary power to submit the case on all or any of the issues and direct the jury to return special verdicts on such issues,⁶⁶ and it may make such submission either of its own motion, without the request of either party⁶⁷ or it may do so at the request of either party,⁶⁸ and on such request should submit each separate issue of fact to the jury.⁶⁹ Under some statutes, in the absence

Pruitt, 54 So.2d 701, 256 Ala. 341.

Recommendation of verdict by court

Under the practice in some jurisdictions the trial court may recommend a special verdict, but the jury are not bound to follow such recommendations.—Lincoln Tower Corp. v. Dunhall's-Florida, Inc., Fla., 61 So. 2d 474.

Direction held not requirement to find special verdict

Directing jury to state in their verdict on which of several separate counts of declaration at law they find for successful plaintiff is not improper as requiring jury to find special verdict, where related but severable single causes of action are joined and sued on in separate counts of one declaration.—Beckwith v. Wrongful death action

The practice of requiring special verdicts in wrongful death actions should be encouraged.—Sinclair Refining Co. v. Henderson, 122 S.W.2d 580, 197 Ark. 319.

Plea of privilege

The same rules apply to the submission of special issues to jury on a plea of privilege as would apply in a trial on the merits, except that the issues are confined to the venue facts.—Williams v. Hemphill County, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W.2d 839.

Inconsistent issues

Where there are several inconsistent issues, it is not necessary for the trial court to grant a party's request to require the jury to render a special verdict unless so required by statute.—Little v. Sugg, 8 So.2d 866, 243 Ala. 196.

69. Ohio.—Gendler v. Cleveland Ry. Co., 18 Ohio App. 48.

of a request by either party for a special verdict, the court has no alternative other than to instruct the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff or for defendant.⁷⁰

A statutory provision, however, that the court, on request of either party, shall submit the cause on special issues raised by the pleadings and evidence is regarded as mandatory, and requires the court, on such request being made, to submit such issues for special verdicts,⁷¹ and a refusal to grant a proper and timely request on a material issue constitutes error⁷² unless the nature of the case is such that it cannot be determined on special issues,⁷³ and the trial court may exercise its discretion as to whether the case is of such nature, subject to review as to whether the case can be so determined.⁷⁴ It has also been held that the case should be so submitted where there are material issues of fact, whether or not such submission is requested,⁷⁵ and that, even after the jury have agreed on a general verdict, the court may recall them to reconsider the case and find a special verdict.⁷⁶

Submission not special charge. Submitting or refusing to submit special issues of fact raised by the evidence is not the giving or refusing of special charges, and is not controlled by the rules applicable thereto.⁷⁷

(2) Propriety and Manner of Submission

A submission of special issues or verdicts is proper where a general verdict would be uncertain and lead to further litigation; and in submitting special issues it is proper for the court to request the jury to find the facts, leaving the judgment to the court, notwithstanding the jury might be able to determine the probable effect of their answers on the judgment.

In particular instances it is proper for the court to require the jury to return special verdicts.⁷⁸ A submission of special issues or verdicts is proper where a general verdict would be uncertain and lead to further litigation,⁷⁹ and the case should be so submitted where the issues are complicated and such as are likely to confuse the jury,⁸⁰ as where there are numerous and distinct items of account involved.⁸¹ The court is not justified in refusing to submit the case on special issues because at the same time requests are made for the giving of special charges,⁸² or because, when the case was so submitted on a previous trial, the jury had disagreed, owing to the involved character of the issues.⁸³

On the other hand, the court may refuse to submit the case on special issues where it would be

Statute held mandatory

Statute relating to submission of issues to jury is mandatory and trial judge, either of his own motion or at suggestion of counsel, must submit such issues as are necessary to settle the material controversies arising on the pleadings.—Wheeler v. Conditional submission

Court did not err in not requiring jury to answer special issue where terms of submission required no answer thereto in case of negative answer to preceding issue, and jury gave such negative answer.—Sanders v. justified in peremptorily instructing to find for one party;⁸⁴ or where a general verdict will meet the requirements of the case,⁸⁵ as where the issues are not complicated⁸⁶ or there is only one material issue in the case;⁸⁷ or where the case is one in which either party is entitled to a general verdict,⁸⁸ unless the right to a general verdict is waived;⁸⁹ or where the request for such submission is not made at the proper time,⁹⁰ or is covered by other issues submitted.⁹¹

Manner of submission. In submitting special issues it is proper for the court to request the jury to find the facts, leaving the judgment to the court,⁹² notwithstanding the jury might be able to determine the probable effect of their answers on the judgment.⁹³ It is also proper for the court to give all necessary definitions and explanations,⁹⁴ but not to charge generally on the law of the case, as discussed supra § 372, although a waiver of a general charge is not essential in order to authorize the submission of the case on special issues;⁹⁵ nor should such a submission be accompanied by a peremptory instruction, regardless of the answers to the special issues.⁹⁶

Submission only on special, not general, issue. A special issue or verdict should be submitted only when the case is submitted on special issues;⁹⁷ and, since the jury cannot return both a general and a special verdict, the case should not be submitted for both a general and special verdict, or in part general and in part special,⁹⁸ and, where the cause is submitted on special issues, it is improper for the court to authorize or require a general verdict⁹⁹ or to accept a general verdict.¹ It has been held, however, that it is not error to permit a general verdict where the special verdict has disposed of all the controverted issues,² and that the submission of special issues, decided in favor of one party, and a general verdict for such party is not ground for reversal, where the judgment is sustained by the general finding.³

Where a statute requires the jury to return a general verdict the court cannot instruct them not to return such a verdict,⁴ and the submission of special questions is not a waiver of the right to such a verdict.⁵ In some jurisdictions the court, in an action for money in which there are disputed questions of fact, cannot, after reserving decision on a motion for nonsuit, call for a special verdict on a single fact question and thereafter direct a general verdict on the facts.⁶

b. As to Special Findings or Interrogatories

- (1) In general
- (2) Propriety or duty of submission

(1) In General

Ordinarily it is within the discretion of the trial court either to submit or to refuse to submit to the jury special findings or special interrogatories, to be returned or answered in connection with a general verdict.

It is a well-settled rule, which in some jurisdictions is made the subject of rules of court or constitutional or statutory provisions, that ordinarily it is within the discretion of the trial court either to

Useful purpose

Special findings can serve a useful purpose when the circumstances of case require such findings.—Fullerton v. Motor Exp., Inc., 100 A.2d 73, 375 Pa. 173.

Special findings have their use where case involves number of different parties standing in different relationships to matter in issue or where conflict on material issue of fact is absolute.—Brown v. Ambridge Yellow Cab Co., 97 A.2d 377, 374 Pa. 208.

In action to recover money only, court is not authorized to require jury to make special findings.—Sherman v. Leicht, 264 N.Y.S. 492, 238 App.Div. 271.

Where jury find general verdict, court may instruct it to find also specially on questions of fact stated in writing.—Sherman v. Leicht, supra.

In order to avoid error resulting from misunderstanding by the jury of the instructions or from erroneous application of the law by the jury, the trial court may submit interrogatories to the jury to discover what facts the jury found from the evidence, so that the court may apply the law to the facts so found.—

objection of either or both parties;¹¹ or where special interrogatories have been requested by the parties the court may submit additional interrogatories of its own motion.¹²

As to direction of verdict. Special interrogatories may be submitted in connection with the direction of a verdict,¹³ and, if the evidence is conflicting, even though both parties move for a directed verdict,¹⁴ and where the answers of the jury to special questions establish all the essentials of plaintiff's cause of action a general verdict may be directed for him.¹⁵ A verdict may not be directed on the basis of the jurors' answers to special questions unless such answers dispose of all issues material to the case.¹⁶

(2) Propriety or Duty of Submission

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the court may exercise its discretion with respect to submitting or refusing to submit special findings or interrogatories requested by either party; but under some statutes it is the duty of the court, on request, to require special findings or to submit properly framed special interrogatories on the issues.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the court may exercise its discretion with respect to submitting or refusing to submit special findings or interrogatories requested by either party.¹⁷ In particular instances questions should be submitted to the jury in the form of a special interrogatory or special finding.¹⁸ A refusal to submit particular interrogatories does not constitute error where they are, in substance, embraced within other interrogatories submitted,¹⁹ or are likely to confuse and mislead the jurors,²⁰ or do not relate to ultimate facts, as discussed infra § 532, or which concern only simple questions of fact necessarily involved in the general verdict,²¹ or where the issues are few²² and uncomplicated,²³ and it is apparent that special findings will not aid the jury in arriving at a correct conclusion.²⁴

Similarly, the court cannot submit to the jury a question wholly within the province of the court²⁵ or by interrogatories take the opinion of the jury on matters of law.²⁶ While it has been held that no litigant may demand submission of special

Statute held not to change rule

Statute providing for submission of special interrogatories to jury, although seeming to be mandatory in form of expression, has not changed general rule giving trial court discretionary power in submission of special interrogatories.—Larsen v. Bliss, 91 P.2d 811, 43 N.M. 265.

Practice

(1) Practice of submitting question to jury is of long standing and does not depend on statute.—Burgess v. Giovannucci, 49 N.E.2d 907, 314 Mass. 262.

(2) Practice in at least one jurisdiction is to ask for general verdict based on all defenses made, after instructing jury as to nature of defenses and their applicability, and not to submit special issues in form of interrogatories.—Clemmer's Adm'r v. interrogatories as a matter of right,²⁷ there is authority to the effect that it is not a mere matter of discretion, but is the duty of the court to submit special interrogatories which are necessary to protect the requesting party from the implications of a general verdict,²⁸ as where reliance is placed on separate and distinct grounds of action or defense²⁹ or where the interrogatories requested are controlling questions in the case.³⁰ It has been said that in a case involving a claim to equitable relief the better practice is to submit appropriate issues to the jury and to grant proper relief on their findings.³¹

A statutory provision that the court, on request of either party, shall instruct the jury, if they render a general verdict, to find specially on particular questions of fact, when they are proper and pertinent to the issues, is regarded as mandatory,³² provided the questions require answers establishing probative facts from which an ultimate material fact may be inferred as a matter of law,³³ and under similar statutory provisions it is the duty of the court, on such a request, to require special findings or to submit properly framed special interrogatories on such issues,³⁴ although a refusal to do so is not error where, in view of the charge and the evidence, the jury fully understand and pass on the question.³⁵

In order to justify the practice whereby a trial court preliminarily submits certain questions of fact to the jury and, after receiving their answers, directs a general verdict on facts found, the parties should formally agree to that method of submission, and a general verdict should be rendered in addition to answers to questions submitted.³⁶ Where the trial court submits special questions of fact to the jury and, instead of directing a verdict based on the jurors' special findings, by agreement of parties makes its own findings based on answers of the jury and subsequently enters judgment on those findings, such procedure, while not recommended, is sufficiently near to sanctioned practice to warrant sustaining judgments.³⁷

§ 530. Rights of Parties as to Submission of Different Theories

In submitting a case on special issues, each party is entitled to have his theory of the case, and the facts constituting the cause of action, on the one hand, and matters pleaded in defense, on the other, affirmatively submitted for the determination of the jury.

In submitting a case on special issues, each party is entitled to have his theory of the case, and the facts constituting the cause of action, on the one hand, and matters pleaded in defense, on the other, affirmatively submitted for the determination of the jury;³⁸ and it has been held that, where plaintiff

Preferable method

Where a complaint is divided into counts and a general verdict is returned, it will be presumed, if the charge and all rulings are correct on any count, that damages were assessed as to that count, and verdict will be sustained and therefore preferable method for defendant to follow as a protection against such an implication is to request trial court to obtain a separate verdict on each count, although use of interrogatories is approved.—*Sheeler v. Issues submitted unconditionally makes a formal request for submission of the case on special issues, it is imperative on the court to submit all issues made by the pleadings and evidence,³⁹ and that, where the material issue of one litigant is presented in one form, his adversary is entitled to have the same issue presented conversely.⁴⁰ Defendant, for example, is entitled to have each independent defense which has been pleaded and is supported by the evidence affirmatively submitted;⁴¹ but he is not entitled to the submission of any affirmative defense which he does not plead.⁴²

Defendant has the right to demand the direct submission of his defense as raised by the evidence according to the state thereof before, and not after, it is interpreted by the jury.⁴³ The question of the right of a defendant to have an affirmative defense submitted must not be determined from the viewpoint of conditions as they appear after the verdict is returned, but from the viewpoint of what the jury might have found if the issue had been submitted to them.⁴⁴ A fortiori, the conditions existing when the charge was given and not after the verdict determine whether there was error in refusing to submit a requested special issue to the jury.⁴⁵ Where the jury are asked to find a par-

Cases submitted on general charges

The rule that defendant is entitled to an affirmative presentation of his defenses applies both in cases submitted on general charges and in cases submitted on special issues.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Ector, 116 S.W.2d 683, 131 Tex. 506.

Independent defense

Defendant may invoke rule requiring submission of special issues on all ultimate issues only where he pleads facts which, if true, would constitute an independent defense, not where only effect of the issue sought to be submitted is to negative an issue submitted in the main charge.—Cross v. White, Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 502, affirmed 132 S.W.2d 580, 134 Tex. 91.

Defendant's right held not preserved

Defendant's right to affirmative submission of each group of facts pleaded and relied on as defense is not preserved by submitting plaintiff's issues and giving general charge directing how to answer such issues in event jury entertains certain views with respect to defenses.—*Maryland Casualty Co. v. Jury's findings on other issues

(1) A defendant is entitled to an affirmative submission of any fact pleaded by him and supported by material evidence, which, if found true, would exculpate him from liability, and he may not be deprived of this right through an adverse finding on some other issue, the answer to which would render him liable.—Kuykendall v. Doose, Tex.Civ.App., 260 S.W.2d 435, error refused no reversible error.

(2) In order to accord fair trial, each party's theories, raised by evidence, must be directly submitted to jury, and such right cannot be lost or defeated by juries' findings on other issues, which indirectly negative favorable finding on issue not submitted, but raised by evidence.—Montgomery v. Gay, Tex.Civ.App., 212 S.W.2d 941.—Gifford-Hill & Co. v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 656.

(3) Defendant has right to have affirmative defensive issues submitted to, and passed on by, jury, even though juries' answers thereto may conflict with their answers to other issues.—Montgomery v. Gay, Tex.Civ. App., 212 S.W.2d 941.

General denial

(1) Under certain procedural rules in Texas, under a general denial a defendant is not entitled to submission of affirmative issues on inconsistent theories if they are raised only by general denial and not by affirmative pleadings on his part.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Tate, Tex. Civ.App., 214 S.W.2d 877.—Kerrville Bus Co. Inc. v. Williams, Tex.Civ. App., 208 S.W.2d 262.—Associated Employers Lloyds v. Aiken, Tex.Civ.

(2) Under rule providing that a party shall not be entitled to an affirmative submission of any issue in his behalf where such issue was raised only by a general denial and not by an affirmative written plea on his part, issues relating to defenses by way of rebuttal or by way of avoidance are regarded as affirmative issues.—Salley v. Black, Sivals & Bryson, Tex.Civ.App., 225 S.W.2d 426, error dismissed.

(3) In earlier cases it was said that defendant's right to affirmative submission of proper issues was not limited to those defensive issues which were affirmatively pleaded and that a defendant's general denial was sufficient to require the submission of any defensive issue raised by the evidence.—McClung Const. Co. v. Muncy, Tex.Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 786, error dismissed.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, Tex.Civ.App., 214 S.W. 773.

§ 531. Questions or Issues to Be Submitted

a. In General

b. Application of rules

a. In General

As a general rule, the special issues should submit to the jury all the controverted material issues or questions of fact, and those only, that are properly raised by the pleading and supported by the evidence. Special interrogatories are proper and should be submitted to the jury when, and only when, they relate to material issues of fact as made by the pleadings and are supported by the evidence.

Generally speaking, where the case is one which is tried on special issues or special verdicts, the issues to be submitted are the special issues that are ordinarily submitted in a cause of that nature,⁴⁷ unless the parties specially agree on other issues.⁴⁸ As a general rule, sometimes embodied in statute, the special issues should submit to the jury all the controverted material issues or questions of fact that are properly raised by the pleading and supported by the evidence,⁴⁹ and it is es-

sentential to this rule that there be sufficient evidence to sustain the pleading which raises the issue.⁵⁰ A failure or refusal to submit such an issue, if prejudicial to one of the parties, constitutes error.⁵¹ In determining whether an issue is supported by the pleadings the court must consider allegations in the pleadings of both parties,⁵² and may supply omissions in the pleadings of one party by allegations in the pleadings of the other.⁵³ Where a case is submitted on special issues, any group of facts, sufficient to establish the cause of action or defense, based on proper pleadings and evidence should be submitted,⁵⁴ where a finding on the grouped facts would be determinative of the ultimate issue to which they relate, and would control the judgment to be entered as to that issue;⁵⁵ but this rule does not permit the framing of an issue requiring an answer to mere evidentiary facts tending to prove or disprove the ultimate issue to which they relate.⁵⁶

The determination of what issues shall be submitted is left largely to the discretion of the trial court.⁵⁷ The special issues submitted should be such as will afford a fair opportunity to each party to develop his case,⁵⁸ make easy the elucidation of the facts to the jury,⁵⁹ and dispose of the matters in controversy without leaving anything to conjecture,⁶⁰ and to which the answers will be sufficient to support a judgment.⁶¹ The court need not permit or require the jury to answer all the issues submitted.⁶² It has been held that the court cannot submit a part of the facts to the jury, and, itself, determine the remainder without a waiver by the parties of a verdict by the jury;⁶³ it cannot ignore vital issues and then find such issues against the party pleading them.⁶⁴

Special interrogatories are proper and should be submitted to the jury on request when, and only when, they relate to material issues of fact as made by the pleadings and supported by the

(1) A cause of action or defense should not be submitted on the issue as to damages merely, where objection is made.—Gaskins v. Mitchell, 139 S.E. 435, 194 N.C. 275—64 C.J. p 1138 note 38.

(2) The issue as to damages should be left to embrace that subject alone.—Carter v. Gill, 84 S.E. 802, 158 N.C. 507, rehearing denied 89 S.E. 28, 171 N.C. 775.

(3) Under such circumstances a separate issue should be submitted as to the cause of action or defense.—Carter v. McGill, supra—64 C.J. p 1138 note 40.

(4) Special issues and interrogatories as to damages generally see infra § 534.

New matter alleged in answer

The rule that material matters alleged on the one side and denied on the other should be submitted in the form of issues to jury applies to new matter alleged in the answer.—Griffin v. United Services Life Ins. Co., 36 S.E.2d 225, 225 N.C. 684.

Parties' consent

Where all of the issues in the case were not submitted to the jury for their special finding, but the parties consented that no other issues should be submitted to the jury, there was no error.—Life & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 6 Tenn.App. 43.

evidence.⁶⁵ In the absence of a statute or rule of procedure to the contrary,⁶⁶ the court is ordinarily not required to submit special interrogatories because of the mere asking,⁶⁷ but has some discretion in determining whether a proposed question should be submitted to the jury.⁶⁸ Whether a request for a special finding should be granted has been held to depend on the particular facts and not on any general rule to be applied blindly.⁶⁹ The interrogatories should be such as can be fairly and intelligently answered from the testimony,⁷⁰ and call for answers which may be controlling of the main issue,⁷¹ or which would be decisive of the case or of some claim involved therein,⁷² and inconsistent with a general verdict that might be returned.⁷³ It is not essential that special findings shall cover all the points in issue,⁷⁴ or that each question submitted shall cover all the issues in the case.⁷⁵ Where a reasonable number of special questions fairly covering the vital questions raised by the pleadings are requested, the court should submit them all, and not select a few to the exclusion of the others.⁷⁶

Special issues or interrogatories unnecessary or improper in general. A special issue or interrogatory should not be submitted to the jury where it presents an issue not raised by the pleadings or supported by the evidence;⁷⁷ where the special

Workmen's compensation

Under a statute providing for submission to a jury of any question of fact on appeal from an award of the commission a party is entitled merely to have special issues submitted as to the ultimate facts so that the court may determine whether the finding of the commission shall be confirmed, reversed, or modified. —Schiller v. Question of law

The question of whether there is any evidence to support a special issue is a question of law to be determined by the court, and in the absence of any evidence to support a finding the special issue should not be submitted.—Panhandle & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Wiggins, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 501, error refused.

Quantum of proof

(1) The exact quantum of proof to raise or establish an issue is not capable of exact determination, but must be determined by human opinion guided and controlled by well-known legal principles.—Coats v. Stewart, Tex.Civ.App., 135 S.W.2d 1026, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Quantum of proof required to entitle a plaintiff to have issue submitted to jury is proof of such facts and circumstances as, taken together with all reasonable inferences therefrom, constitute some evidence of probative force of their existence.—Ford v. Panhandle & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 252 S.W.2d 561, 151 Tex. 581.

(3) Testimony must be sufficient to warrant a reasonable belief in existence of fact inquired about, and evidence which creates merely a surmise is insufficient to require submission of an issue.—Texas City Terminal Ry. Co. v. McLeMore, Tex.Civ. App., 225 S.W.2d 1007, refused no reversible error.

(4) Evidence should be more than purely speculative and when its probative force is so weak that it only raises a mere surmise or suspicion, the evidence is not, in legal contemplation, "any evidence."—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Bullard, Tex.Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 126.

Evidence contrary to preponderance of evidence

(1) If there is any evidence of probative force or value raising affirmative of a material issue in a trial, such evidence supports submission of a special issue thereon in charge of court, even though answer in affirmative thereto by jury will have to be set aside and a new trial granted because against the great weight and preponderance of other evidence thereon.—Alvey v. Goforth, Tex.Civ. App., 263 S.W.2d 313, reversed on other grounds Goforth v. Alvey, Sup., 271 S.W.2d 404.

(2) Refusal to submit issue was held not error, where affirmative finding would not have been supported by evidence.—Ley v. Patton, Tex.Civ. App., 81 S.W.2d 1087, error dismissed.

Excluded evidence held insufficient, prima facie, to require submission of issue.—Anchor v. Wichita County Water Improvement Dist. No. 2, 68 S.W.2d 657, 123 Tex. 105.

Withdrawn count

An interrogatory which applied to entire complaint although first count had been withdrawn from jury's consideration was objectionable.—Racine Fuel Co. v. Rawlins, 36 N.E.2d 710, 377 Ill. 376.

material or noncontrolling matters;⁸⁰ that is, where the determination one way or the other would not serve any useful or important purpose in deciding any issue in the case;⁸¹ where, in case of an interrogatory, the answer thereto, if contrary to the general verdict, would not be conclusive;⁸² and the answer thereto would not affect any judgment to be rendered;⁸³ or where it does not call for findings of fact which would determine any issue in the case.⁸⁴ It has been held that where the pleadings are defective and evidence is introduced on all matters in controversy, it is not error to submit questions which respond to issues made by the evidence.⁸⁵ A refusal is not made error by the fact that the question refused was approved by the attorneys for the opposing parties.⁸⁶

or highly technical;⁸⁸ which calls for a mere matter of opinion, without asking as to the facts on which such opinion may rest,⁸⁹ or is based on a contract provision which is incapable of performance;⁹⁰ or which calls for a statement showing on which paragraph or count of the petition the verdict is based,⁹¹ or for the mere cross-examination of the jury as to the mental processes by which they arrive at the conclusions of fact,⁹² or to test the good faith of the jury.⁹³

Questions of law or mixed law and fact. Issues or questions submitted to a jury must be confined to matters of fact, without embodying questions of law,⁹⁴ and, therefore, a special issue or interrogatory is improper, and may be refused submission, where it embodies or calls for a question or conclusion of law,⁹⁵ as where it requires the construc-

Legal meaning of term

If a word or phrase in special interrogatory calls on the jury to use only the common use or dictionary definition to ascertain its meaning, the interrogatory asks for a mere finding of fact, but if the questionable word or phrase requires from the court an instruction concerning its legal meaning, the interrogatory asks for a conclusion of mixed law and fact, and the interrogatory is improper.—Tucker Freight Lines v. Gross, 33 N.E.2d 553, 109 Ind.App. 454.

General and specific allegations

(1) Ordinarily, general averments of negligence or contributory negligence are limited and controlled by various acts specified, and special issues should be restricted to such specific acts of negligence alleged and proved.—Clary v. Morgan Motor Co., Tex.Civ.App., 246 S.W.2d 936.

(2) Usually, it is not proper to submit issues as to negligence in general terms, especially over the objection of the opposite party, in cases where specific acts of negligence are pleaded and relied on.—Clary v. Morgan Motor Co., supra—Fort Worth & Denver City Ry. Co. v. Burton, Tex.Civ.App., 158 S.W.2d 601, error dismissed.

(1) Issues must be confined to the particular contributory negligence pleaded.—Clowe & Cowan v. Morgan, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 863, error refused.

(2) A general plea of contributory negligence not excepted to is sufficient to warrant submission of issue either generally or in such respective groups of issues as may be made by evidence, if submission is requested, and this rule is not changed or abrogated by rules of civil procedure requiring defense of contributory negligence to be set forth affirmatively by party seeking to rely thereon.—Coleman v. Texas & Pac. Ry. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 241 S.W.2d 308, error refused.

Specific acts raised by pleadings and evidence

64 C.J. p 1132 note 2.

Special interrogatory may refer to one or more ultimate facts or issues.

Iowa—Olinger v. Tiefenthaler, 285 N.W. 137, 226 Iowa 847.

Ultimate facts

(1) "Ultimate facts" lie in area between evidence and conclusion of law.—Scott v. Cismadi, 74 N.E.2d 563, 80 Ohio App. 39.

(2) An "ultimate issue" of fact to be submitted to a jury is one to which the law directly attaches in applying a rule or principle of law, which is potentially necessary to a disposition of case.—Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Bruce, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 889, error dismissed.

(3) An "ultimate fact" is one essential to the right of action or matter of defense.—Wichita Falls & Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. Pepper, 126 S.W.2d 79, 134 Tex. 340—Dreessen v. Sidor, Tex.Civ.App., 354 S.W.2d 308, refused no reversible error.

court to submit it and it is error for the court to refuse to submit it.⁷⁴ Every material conflict in the evidence,⁷⁵ or every fact tending to establish or disprove the main issues of liability or nonliability⁷⁶ need not be submitted. A special issue or interrogatory is improper and may be refused where it does not call for the determination of some ultimate fact,⁷⁷ as where it relates to subordinate facts to be considered in deciding ultimate facts, and necessarily embraced in the finding of, and merely incidental to, the ultimate issue,⁷⁸ or where it is designed merely to recapitulate the evidence rather than to determine the facts proved by the evidence.⁷⁹

Evidentiary facts. As a corollary to the rule that a special issue or interrogatory must relate to an ultimate fact, a special issue or interrogatory is improper, and may properly be refused submission, where it relates to, or calls for, merely an evidentiary fact,⁸⁰ unless an ultimate fact may be inferred

(4) "Ultimate facts" are logical results of proofs or evidence and are conclusions of facts, and final resulting effect reached by processes of logical reasoning from evidentiary facts; an "ultimate fact" may be result of inference drawn from more than one evidentiary fact.—Scott v. Cismadi, 74 N.E.2d 563, 80 Ohio App. 38.

(5) An "ultimate fact" is one which can reasonably be inferred from the facts found without applying to the facts any legal principle or measuring them by any legal standard.—Tucker Freight Lines v. Gross, 32 N.E.2d 353, 109 Ind.App. 454.

(6) Determination of what constitutes an "ultimate issue" to be submitted to jury involves proper legal analysis of controversy.—Dreesen v. Sidor, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W.2d 908, refused no reversible error.

(7) Each group of facts pleaded by party, which, standing alone, would, if proved, constitute a complete defense to suit, presents an "ultimate issue".—Northern Texas Traction Co. v. Bruce, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 889, error dismissed.

Synonymous terms

The terms "ultimate issues," "ultimate facts," "essential facts," "essential issues," and "controlling issues" are frequently used synonymously with respect to necessity for submission.—Wichita Falls & Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. Pepper, 135 S.W.2d 79, 134 Tex. 360.—Dreesen v. Sidor, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W.2d 908, refused no reversible error.

therefrom as a matter of law,⁸¹ or unless the evidentiary matters as established in the course of the proceedings necessarily control the ultimate issues of fact.⁸² It has been held that the trial court has a wide discretion under various circumstances in allowing interrogatories with respect to subordinate facts as distinguished from ultimate conclusions.⁸³

§ 533. — Admitted or Uncontroverted Facts

Special issues and interrogatories as to matters which are not in dispute should not be submitted to the jury.

Only controverted questions of fact should be submitted to the jury,⁸⁴ and the court may properly refuse to submit special issues or questions as to facts which are not disputed,⁸⁵ or are admitted or

Interested witness

(1) A material fact which is dependent on testimony of interested witness alone should be submitted to jury.—Larson v. Whitten, Tex.Civ. App., 111 S.W.2d 736, error dismissed—Cude v. Vaughn, Tex.Civ.App., 111 S.W.2d 1155—Etna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Tobolowsky, Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 556, error dismissed.

(2) Where testimony of an interested party stands uncontradicted, no circumstances appear reflecting on its verity, nothing appears to cause reasonable minds to doubt truth of facts stated, and such testimony is corroborated by other substantial testimony, question of witness' credibility need not be submitted to jury.—Longhorn Trucks v. Balles, Tex. Civ.App., 225 S.W.2d 642, mandamus overruled—United Employers Cas. Co. v. Barker, Tex.Civ.App., 148 S.W.2d 260—Coats v. Stewart, Tex.Civ. on which the evidence is conclusive and could be answered only one way,⁸⁹ as where it is conclusively established as a matter of law.⁹⁰ Such questions may be answered by the court instead of submitting them to the jury, before delivering them to the jury,⁹¹ and a motion should be made, asking it to pronounce judgment on such facts.⁹² A recital of the undisputed facts by the court in questions to the jury is not improper, as invading the province of the jury,⁹³ nor is it error for the court to include such facts in a special verdict, and direct the answers to be made thereto.⁹⁴ However, the court cannot refuse to submit interrogatories on the ground that the parties have agreed on the facts unless such agreement is made matter of record.⁹⁵

§ 534. — As to Damages or Amount of Recovery

The general rules with respect to the submission of special issues or interrogatories apply with respect to the question of damages and the amount of recovery.

The general rules, discussed supra §§ 531-533, that where a case is submitted on special issues or interrogatories, the ultimate issues raised by the pleadings and evidence, and only such, are to be submitted have been applied with respect to damages and the amount of recovery.⁹⁶ An undisputed or admitted issue with respect to damages should not be submitted by a special issue or interrogatory,⁹⁷ nor should a matter of mere calculation be submitted.¹⁸ Where damages, if recoverable at all, are recoverable as a whole and not for aggregate or distinct items, special issues or interrogatories as to the items or elements of damage are improper and should be refused,¹⁹ but the submission of separate issues as to each item of damage separately alleged and proved is proper;¹ and where plaintiff has suffered separate and distinct injuries it is error to submit the issue of damages as a unit and proper to submit them separately.² Special interrogatories and issues as to the items or elements of damage must not be in such form as to permit a double recovery;³ and, where the circumstances of the case are such that successive suits have been or may be brought for injury to the same subject matter, the court may submit the case on special issues and have the different items of damages distinctly passed on, so that there will be no danger of a subsequent recovery for the same damage.⁴ Special issues, or particular questions of fact, calling for answers affecting exemplary or punitive damages, may be submitted to the jury in a tort action, regardless of whether such damages may or may not properly be allowed or are within the complaint, where the issues thus presented are otherwise material.⁵ In a suit for temporary damages, an issue for permanent damages need not be submitted.⁶

Under the facts and circumstances of the case, particular special issues and interrogatories have been held proper or erroneously refused as to damages and the amount of recovery,⁷ such as issues and interrogatories with respect to the elements of Interest. Where the necessary and controverted fact issues are submitted to, and found by, the jury, it is not necessary to submit the fact of interest as damages, where no additional or controverted facts are to be found on which it should be based or calculated.⁴¹

§ 535. Requests for Special Verdict or Findings

The necessity and sufficiency of requests for special verdicts or findings are discussed infra § 536; the time for presenting such requests, infra § 537, and the submission of interrogatories or issues to opposing counsel, infra § 538. The refusal of such requests by the courts where the questions have already been submitted or are included in, or equivalent to, a general verdict is considered infra §§ 539-540.

to take a special verdict or to have interrogatories answered where he has made no request therefor.⁴³ Similarly, where the court submits questions calling for a special verdict or special findings, a party desiring other and further questions to be propounded should suggest them to the court,⁴⁴ and a party desiring to have questions elucidated or explained should request that it be done.⁴⁵ A party may, without himself submitting special interrogatories, adopt as his own those submitted by the adverse party, and join in the request that they be answered.⁴⁶

The request must be unconditional,⁴⁷ except where a statute provides otherwise.⁴⁸ Whether a request may be oral or written depends on statutory provisions,⁴⁹ and under some statutes so providing the request must be in writing⁵⁰ or be entered on the minutes of the court.⁵¹

Special findings should be requested separately.⁵² Although it has been held that where interrogatories are requested in such manner that they may be separately submitted or refused, and some are proper and some improper to be given, it is the duty of the court to go through the request and eliminate the questions which are not proper to be submitted,⁵³ and that where a requested interrogatory is slightly defective, the court, instead of refusing to submit it, should lend its assistance to counsel in putting the interrogatory into proper form.⁵⁴ It has also been held that interrogatories not requested separately or independently of each other may be refused if any are improper,⁵⁵ and interrogatories dependent on other interrogatories which the court has properly refused to submit should likewise be refused.⁵⁶

A request that if the jury find a verdict for plaintiff they shall state the facts on which it rests is not a proper request either for a special verdict or for special interrogatories.⁵⁷ Under various statutes or rules providing that any controverted matter of fact omitted from a special verdict and not brought to the attention of the court by a request shall be deemed determined by the court in conformity with its judgment, and that the failure to request a finding by the jury on such matter shall be deemed a waiver of a jury trial pro tanto and a consent that such matter be determined by the court, failure to request the submission of questions of fact constitutes a waiver of the right to have the jury pass thereon,⁵⁸ and authorizes a finding by the court,⁵⁹ so that findings by the court as to matters on which no special verdict has been

Submission of special interrogatories on defendant's request, although request contained no condition that questions be answered only in case general verdict should be rendered was not an abuse of discretion, where there was a general verdict returned, and it did not appear that any objection was made to granting of special interrogatories on ground that request did not contain such condition, or exceptions noted to action of trial court in submitting them.—*Weaver v. asked are binding on the parties,⁶⁰ and such matters must be considered settled in favor of the party in whose judgment is rendered.⁶¹ The fact that a request is defective or too general does not operate as a waiver, under such statute, where the request is sufficient to call the controverted matter to the attention of the court,⁶² and it becomes the duty of the court to frame and propound the correct question.⁶³

A stipulation that there is only one question, specifying it, for the jury is a sufficient request that it be submitted.⁶⁴ It has been held that a request for the submission of particular questions is not a sufficient request for a special verdict on the whole case.⁶⁵ The failure to give a requested interrogatory is tantamount to a refusal to give it.⁶⁶

b. Special Issues

Under the practice of submitting causes to the jury on special issues alone, an issue not submitted and for the submission of which no request is made must ordinarily be deemed to have been waived.

Where the practice obtains of submitting causes to the jury on special issues alone, under a statute or rule providing that the court shall, on request of either party, and may without such request, submit the case on special issues, which shall be separately submitted so as to be answered separately by the jury, and that when a case is submitted on special issues it shall be the duty of the court to submit all the issues made by the pleadings and evidence, but that failure to submit any issue shall not be ground for reversal unless submission thereof has been requested by the party complaining of the judgment, and that on appeal an issue not submitted and not requested by a party shall be deemed as found by the court in such manner as to support the judgment if there is evidence to sustain such a finding as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1562 c (2), all the issues in the case should be covered,⁶⁷ and unless the error is fundamental,⁶⁸ an issue not submitted and for the submission of which no request is made must ordinarily be deemed to have been waived,⁶⁹ where two or more distinct

Finding after verdict

Where there was no request made for submission to jury of issue of adverse possession, and there was such conflict of evidence on that issue that it did not admit holding as matter of law that there was adverse possession, defendant was not entitled to have the court find these issues in defendant's favor, on motion made after verdict for plaintiffs.—*Becker v. Limitation Waiver only applies to particular trial involved.—Hicks v. Matthews, Tex., 266 S.W.2d 846.

Exception

Where special issue inquired of jury in compensation case whether claimant had incurred doctor and hospital bills as direct result of injuries in suit, if compensation carrier desired to take advantage of omission in subsequently submitted special issue which inquired as to amount of reasonable and necessary doctor bills, if any, but made no mention of hospital bills, it was incumbent on carrier to except to such omission.—

Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Allgood, Tex. Civ.App., 252 S.W.2d 589.

Waiver not shown

(1) In suit to recover half of attorney's fee collected by defendant, where plaintiff based his right on two contracts, the fact that plaintiff did not request submission to jury of any issues inquiring about the later of the two contracts, did not constitute a waiver of such plea, where reasonable implications were to the contrary.—Wilson v. Melugin, Tex.Civ. App., 198 S.W.2d 140, error refused no reversible error.

(2) Where special issues submitted substantially embodied essential facts of a litigant's theory, it could not be said that there was a waiver of such theory.—Neyland v. Brown, 170 S.W.2d 207, 141 Tex. 253, modified on other grounds 172 S.W.2d 89, 141 Tex. 253.

(3) In compensation suit tried on special issues, where injury allegedly sustained by employee was to his right wrist, failure of employee to request submission of any issue as to whether the injury had extended to or involved other portions of his body, did not constitute a waiver of such ground of recovery.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Landry, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 290, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(4) In suit by husband and wife to enjoin female defendant from molesting plaintiffs, plaintiffs did not waive their right to recover by failure to submit to jury the controlling issue of recovery.—Hunt v. Hudgins, Tex. Civ.App., 168 S.W.2d 703.

case a failure to request its submission does not constitute a waiver thereof,⁷² and except that failure to request the submission of an issue does not waive it where an exception to the plea by which it was raised has been sustained.⁷³ The court may, and should, however, make findings on incidental or supplemental issues not extending to an independent ground of recovery or defense, where such issues have not been submitted to the jury and no request has been made for their submission,⁷⁴ provided the issues have not been abandoned by agreement of the parties;⁷⁵ but a submission or request for the submission of an issue to the jury precludes a finding thereon by the judge,⁷⁶ and an issue submitted only in part, or defectively submitted, is not waived.⁷⁷

Thus, a party in order to avoid a waiver of a controlling issue on which his right of recovery or defense depends has the duty of establishing such right of recovery or defense as a matter of law, or of obtaining the submission of such controlling issue on which his right of recovery of defense depends,⁷⁸ but no waiver can be imputed to the other party for such failure,⁷⁹ since it is not incumbent on either party to request the submission of special issues on which his adversary's right of recovery or defense depends,⁸⁰ and an objection by a party to an issue as submitted by the court for the other party is sufficient, and deprives the court of authority to find either expressly or by implication on the issue, without a tender by the objecting party of a special issue.⁸¹

Requested special issues are designed either to correct an error in an issue submitted by the main charge or to supply an omission therein.⁸² While it has been held that a request is sufficient where it is in writing and in such form as to advise the court that the applicant desires to have the jury, rather than the judge, decide the issue incorporated in the request,⁸³ and that it is sufficient to make an objection to the charge or issues submitted by the court, specifically pointing out a failure to submit a particular issue,⁸⁴ or to request the court to prepare and submit a proper issue,⁸⁵ without accompanying such objection or request with the tender of a prepared special issue, especially where there is affirmative and positive error in the issues submitted,⁸⁶ a mere objection to the issues given or to the omission of an issue, without accompanying such objection with the tender of special omitted issue, is not sufficient as a proper request for the submission of an omitted issue,⁸⁷ although where an issue or definition is given, an objection to the form of the issue or definition given is sufficient to require the court to submit the issue or definition in the proper form, without a requested special issue for the same purpose.⁸⁸ Thus, where the court fails

Refusal of issue presenting adversary's case not error

In suit to require administrator to inventory a tractor and automobile as part of estate, where administrator did not request issue presenting his defense that there had been a completed gift, refusal to give issue relating thereto requested by plaintiff was not error in view of fact that plaintiff's theory had been presented in other issues.—Wells v. Exception to issue

In motorcyclist's action for injuries sustained when taxicab struck motorcycle, defendant's exception that word "mission" used in special issue inquiring whether the driver was operating the taxicab on a "mission" for, and in behalf of, defendant at time of accident did not amount to a request that issue of scope of employment be submitted.—Broadus v. Unconditional request

Compensation insurer was not required to make specific request for unconditional submission of whether claimant's incapacity was temporary, in order to obtain such submission.—Texas Fire & Casualty Underwriters v. Watson, Tex.Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 436, error refused.

Written request as dissent

It is only by a written request that a party puts on record his dissent from the action of the trial court and his insistence on the right to have the jury rather than the judge, decide the point at issue.—Wichita Falls & Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. Pepper, 135 S.W.2d 79, 134 Tex. 360—Moore v. Pierson, 94 S.W. 1182, 100 Tex. 113—Clowe & Cown v. Morgan, Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 863, error refused.

Substantially correct form

Under Rules of Civil Procedure, an issue must be tendered in substantially correct form, and such requirement does not mean that it must be absolutely correct nor does it mean that one that is merely sufficient to call the matter to attention of trial court will suffice, but rather it means one that in substance and in the main is correct and that is not affirmatively incorrect.—Modica v. Howard, Tex. Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 1093.

court should submit or refuse them as an entirety,⁹⁶ and, hence, a special issue dependent on another special issue which the court has properly refused should likewise be refused.⁹⁷

Furthermore, while the court may modify and correct a requested issue before submitting it,⁹⁸ and while it has been held that even though a special issue as requested to be submitted is defective or incorrect, if it is sufficient to call the attention of the court to an issue in the case the duty devolves on the court to make a correct submission of such issue,⁹⁹ in general the court is under no obligation to reform or modify an erroneous or defective requested issue,¹ at least where the issues have already been adequately presented to the jury,² and such a request may ordinarily be refused,³ although the fact that an issue as requested imposes an excessive burden on the requesting party is no ground for refusing it.⁴

§ 537. — Time for Presenting Requests and Interrogatories

Except as fixed or restricted by statute, the time for filing requests for special findings is largely in the discretion of the trial court.

Except as fixed or restricted by statute,⁵ the time for filing requests for special findings is largely in the discretion of the trial court,⁶ which may prescribe and enforce a reasonable rule⁷ or order⁸ with respect thereto, and may modify or waive such rule or order in its discretion, provided such discretion is not abused to the palpable injury of a party;⁹ but a request should not be submitted at such a state of the trial as to work surprise or be manifestly unfair to the other side.¹⁰ A request may be presented before the issues are closed,¹¹ and before argument is begun,¹² even after arguments on requested instructions,¹³ or before the general charge to the jury has been begun.¹⁴ It need not be received after argument has been com-

Under Workmen's Compensation Act

It has been held that the proper practice in cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act is to frame and present the questions of fact to the trial court so that they may be passed on by the court before the jury is sworn.—Central Const. Corporation v. Harrison, 112 A. 627, 137 Md. 256.

menced¹⁵ or closed,¹⁶ after the court has intimated the character of the instructions it will give,¹⁷ or after the general charge has been prepared,¹⁸ begun,¹⁹ or given,²⁰ or after the jury have retired,²¹ and it is within the discretion of the court whether it will entertain a request for additional findings after the jury have brought in findings on questions originally submitted to it.²² It is too late to submit requests for special findings after general verdict,²³ after verdict directed,²⁴ or after the discharge of the jury.²⁵ Requests for special findings are premature if made before any evidence has been introduced in the cause.²⁶ Exception to the refusal of the court to submit special interrogatories must show when the interrogatories were presented to the court.²⁷

Allowing time to prepare requests. The court should allow counsel a reasonable time in which to prepare interrogatories or issues which he desires to have submitted,²⁸ the length of such time ordinarily being within the discretion of the court.²⁹

§ 538. — Submission of Interrogatories or Issues to Counsel

The submission of proposed interrogatories or issues to opposing counsel depends on statutory provisions.

Where so provided by statute, special interrogatories or issues desired by a party to be submitted to the jury must first be submitted to counsel for the adverse party,³⁰ before arguments are begun under some statutory provisions,³¹ or under others within a reasonable time after the charge is given to counsel for examination,³² and if not so submitted may properly be refused by the court;³³ but in the absence of statute requiring it such submission to opposing counsel is not necessary,³⁴ although it has been said to be the better practice, in order that opportunity may be given to examine the interrogatories or issues and make any proper objection thereto.³⁵ According to some authorities, the court is not bound to submit to counsel or the parties special interrogatories proposed to be given on its own motion, where such submission is not required by statute;³⁶ but there is also authority to the contrary.³⁷

§ 539. — Questions Already Submitted

As a general rule, the submission to the jury of a requested special interrogatory or issue may properly be refused by the court where the substance thereof, or as much of it as is proper and appropriate, is covered by an interrogatory or issue already submitted.

Evidentiary facts

Questions calling merely for evidentiary facts supporting the principal issues submitted were properly refused—El Paso Electric Co. v. Leeper, Tex.Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 863—Gaertner v. Stolle, Tex.Civ.App., 238 S.W. 252.

Conditional submission

Where court has already submitted an issue, even though it is submitted conditionally on the way a preceding issue is to be answered, and it is submitted at request of a party or without his objection, he cannot require court to submit identical issue again, although such issue does not contain the condition—Uptmor v. Janes, Tex.Civ.App., 210 S.W.2d 235, refused no reversible error.

Emergency

The issue of emergency is covered by issues submitted concerning primary negligence and discovered peril.—Reddick v. Longacre, Tex.Civ.App., 228 S.W.2d 264, refused no reversible error—Younger Bros. v. Ross, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 621, error dismissed.

Unavoidable accident

Sole cause and proximate cause

(1) In action for injuries to passenger in bus which overturned, where defendant was not entitled to have both the issue of sole cause as submitted to jury, and issue of sole proximate cause as requested by it, defendant not having objected to giving the former could not complain of refusal to give latter.—Airline Motor Coaches v. Owens, Tex.Civ.App., 199 S.W.2d 802, refused no reversible error.

(2) "Proximate cause" is broader and more comprehensive than "sole cause," and more proof and a greater burden of evidence is required to prove that an act of negligence was the "sole cause" than to show that it was a "proximate cause," and it is not error to refuse to submit question of sole proximate cause as to such matters where the same question is submitted as the proximate cause of the injury.—Hemseil v. Summers, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 865.

New and independent cause

(1) Where unavoidable accident is submitted there is no need to submit new and independent cause, unless the particular facts which constitute each are different and are separately pleaded.—Texas, N. M. & Okl. Coaches v. Williams, Tex.Civ.App., 191 S.W.2d 66, refused for want of merit—Dallas Railway & Terminal Co. v. Little, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 289, error dismissed.

(2) In suit arising out of automobile collision in a fog, there was no error in refusal to submit issue inquiring whether fog was not a new and independent cause of accident, where that issue was covered by submission of issue of unavoidable accident and issue inquiring whether fog was sole proximate cause of collision.—Younger Bros. v. Ross, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W.2d 621, error dismissed.

Thus, it is ordinarily proper to refuse issues which are merely the negative or opposite of issues already submitted,⁴¹ and while each party is entitled to have his theory of the case, and the facts constituting the cause of action, on the one hand, and matter pleaded in defense, on the other, affirmatively submitted, as discussed supra § 530, a party is not entitled to a complete duplication in the submission of special issues which present solely a positive and negative phase of the same question.⁴² On the other hand, in cases involving converse issues, both should be submitted even though partial duplication may result,⁴³ and the fact that the affirmative submission of plaintiff's case, or findings on other issues submitted, by necessary implication negative a defensive issue does not affect defendant's right to have the issue affirmatively submitted.⁴⁴ Furthermore, where an issue is given the court is not required to give another which presents merely another phase or different shade of that issue,⁴⁵ although whether it presents only

Absence of objection

(1) The court is not required to submit an issue more than once and hence where no objection was raised to the manner in which the court proposed to submit the issues, refusal to again submit them as requested was not error—Edmondson v. Carroll, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 378, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Refusal to give requested issues, which were but different forms of issues submitted without objection, was not error—Blue Bonnet Life Ins. Co. v. Connaway, Tex.Civ.App., 183 S.W.2d 1015.

(3) Where trial court gave allegedly erroneous special issue, but no objection was made thereto, it was not error for court to refuse to give in addition to that special issue a requested special issue on the same subject, even though correct—City of Denton v. Hunt, Tex.Civ.App., 235 S.W.2d 212, error refused no reversible error—Shultz v. Dallas Power & Light Co., Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 814, error dismissed, judgment correct—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hill Bros., Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 432.

(4) In compensation proceeding where trial court submitted issue of lump sum settlement under both issues of hardship and injustice, trial court did not err in refusing to submit defendant's requested issue on the same point containing the statutory word "manifest" omitted from the special issues given in view of fact that the omission was not called to attention of trial court—Texas State Highway Department v. Reeves, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 357, error refused.

Duplication or multiplication of issues

(1) Two submissions of the same issue to jury are never required.—Pickens v. Harrison, 252 S.W.2d 575, 151 Tex. 562—Little Rock Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Dunn, 222 S.W.2d 985, 148 Tex. 197—Pacific Emp. Co. v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 221 S.W.2d 322, error refused no reversible error—Zepeda v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 212, error dismissed—State Nat. Bank of Houston v. General denial

Where trial court submitted special issues on all points of contributory negligence affirmatively pleaded by store owner, store owner was not entitled to submission of special issue inquiring if customer's manner in attempting to descend stairs was the sole proximate cause of fall, because of general denial, since a general denial does not put in issue additional issues of contributory negligence not affirmatively pleaded.—McCorry's Stores Corp. v. Murphy, Tex. Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 735, error refused.

another phase or different shade of the issue given must be determined under the peculiar facts of each case.⁴⁶ In order to justify a refusal, an interrogatory or issue requested must have been covered fully by another or others given,⁴⁷ and a special issue should be submitted where answers to other issues submitted would not necessarily answer it.⁴⁸ It has been held to be improper to refuse to submit an issue requiring a more specific answer than any submitted will call for,⁴⁹ except that where a general question on a particular issue has been submitted at the request of a party, a further request by him for a more specific question on the same issue may properly be refused.⁵⁰

§ 540. — Questions Included in, or Equivalent to, General Verdict

Questions included in, or equivalent to, a general verdict need not be submitted by the court to the jury.

The court in the trial of a case need not submit to the jury for special findings questions which will necessarily be disposed of by the general verdict,⁵¹ or a special interrogatory the answer to which would be decisive of the whole case and equivalent to a general or special verdict.⁵²

§ 541. Preparation and Form of Interrogatories or Issues

- a. In general
- b. Affirmative or negative form
- c. Conditional submission

a. In General

In the absence of statute providing otherwise, special interrogatories or issues for submission to the jury need not be in any particular form, it being sufficient if they substantially present issues and, when answered, determine rights of the parties; and the form of questions and manner of propounding them are largely in the discretion of the trial court.

In the absence of statute otherwise providing, special interrogatories or issues for submission to the jury need not be in any particular form, it being sufficient if they substantially present issues and, when answered, determine rights of the parties.⁵³ Generally, it is the duty of the trial court fused no reversible error—Gonzales v. Orsak, Civ.App., 205 S.W.2d 793.

Suggestion made by supreme court from time to time that one form of special issue is less objectionable than another, or that one form is preferable to another, is not to be taken as implying that such form is exclusive or that a prior suggested form is erroneous, but the form of special issues used in ascertaining essential facts in compensation proceedings is limited only to extent that they should be so framed as to secure substantial justice without prejudice to parties.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, 141 S.W.2d 312, 135 Tex. 232, answers conformed to, Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 350.

to supervise the form of special questions to the jury, so as to make them pertinent to the issues and the testimony,⁵⁴ and requested interrogatories or issues may or should be refused if they are not presented in proper physical form.⁵⁵ The form of questions and manner of propounding them are largely in the discretion of the trial judge,⁵⁶ that is, the form of special issues employed in submitting a case to the jury must depend in some measure on the peculiar pleadings and evidence and the practical difficulties facing the trial judge in ascertaining through the special issues the essential facts,⁵⁷ and the measure of his discretion in so doing is limited only to the extent that its exercise does not operate to the prejudice of the parties.⁵⁸ Statutory requirements must, however, be observed.⁵⁹

Each interrogatory should be plain and direct,⁶⁰ should call for a finding as to a single fact,⁶¹ and should be so framed that the answer, whether affirmative or negative, will be conclusive of the fact,⁶² and, in connection with any other findings, will form the basis for a judgment,⁶³ or, in the case of special interrogatories, serve to limit or explain the general verdict.⁶⁴ A question submitted

Conformity to pleadings

Issues should be submitted in such form that when judgment is rendered conformable to verdict, it will clearly appear judgment also conforms to pleadings.—Jones-O'Brien, Inc. v. Lloyd, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 1069, error dismissed.

Consistency with verdict

A special interrogatory which is so restricted as to time and fact that an answer thereto favorable to party presenting it would not be inconsistent with a general verdict for his adversary may be refused.—Kennard v. Palmer, 53 N.E.2d 908, 143 Ohio St. 1.

Ultimate facts

In submitting a special verdict, questions must be so framed that jury can find ultimate facts, and those findings should inform trial court and reveal all essential facts necessary to enable the court to enter the correct judgment protecting the rights of all.—Carlson v. Strasser, 2 N.W.2d 233, 239 Wis. 531.

64 C.J. p 1147 note 50.

Concealment of facts

Charges and submission of issues, general in nature, portraying the whole of plaintiff's pleadings, so as to conceal under a mass of generalities the facts relied on for recovery, are improper.—Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. of Tex. v. Roberts, Tex.Civ.App., 225 S.W.2d 198, refused no reversible error, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 54, 340 U.S. 832, 95 L.Ed. 611, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 193, 340 U.S. 885, 95 L.Ed. 643.

False statements and representations

An issue of false statements and representations should not be submitted in general terms, but substance of statement or representation should be submitted, asking jury if particular statement or representation was made, whether it was true or false, and whether it was relied on in doing the act or thing pleaded as induced by it.—Finney v. Finney, Tex. Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 263, error refused.

Special issues held not objectionable

Tex.—Cree v. Miller, Civ.App., 255 S.W.2d 565, refused no reversible error—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Harkey, Civ.App., 208 S.W.2d 915, affirmed 208 S.W.2d 919, 146 Tex. 504—Associated Emp. Lloyds v. Thomas, Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 409, error dismissed, judgment correct—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Carroll, Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 1101—Southern Underwriters v. Parker, Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 738, error refused—Cumif v. Bernard Corp., Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 577, error refused.

Questions as to negligence

(1) It is improper to submit negligence in general terms over the objection of the opposite party where specific acts of negligence are pleaded and relied on.

Ohio.—Wheeling & L. E. Ry. Co. v. Hollywood Cartage Co., 93 N.E.2d 708, 86 Ohio App. 513.

Tex.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 116 S.W.2d 1056, 131 Tex. 622, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 487, 306 U.S. 639, 83 L.Ed. 1040—McDonald v. Joske's of Tex., Civ.App., 288 S.W.2d 475—Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. of Tex. v. Roberts, Civ.App., 225 S.W.2d 198, refused no reversible error, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 54, 340 U.S. 832, 95 L.Ed. 611, rehearing denied 71 S.Ct. 193, 340 U.S. 885, 95 L.Ed. 643.

64 C.J. p 1147 note 50 [a].

(2) Where acts of negligence, together with proximate cause, as charged against defendant were submitted to jury, and all were found in favor of plaintiffs, and thereafter issue was submitted whether jury found that terror of one of plaintiffs was proximately caused by negligence, if any, of defendant's agent in operating automobile, trial court did not err in failing to resubmit specific acts of negligence as elements of special issue.—Foster v. Woodward, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 417, error refused.

(3) Issues held not erroneous as too general.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 116 S.W.2d 1056, 131 Tex. 622, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 487, 306 U.S. 639, 83 L.Ed. 1040—S. H. Kress & Co. v. Selph, Tex.Civ.App., 250 S.W.2d 883, refused no reversible error—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Duncan, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W.2d 431—Clark-Daniel's v. Deathe, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 1091, error refused—Vincent v. Johnson, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 135, error dismissed—Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Wimberley, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 860, error dismissed—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Hawthorne, Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 895, affirmed 116 S.W.2d 1056, 131 Tex. 622, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 487, 306 U.S. 639, 83 L.Ed. 1040.

66. Tex.—El Paso Electric Co. v. Hedrick, Com.App., 60 S.W.2d 761—Advance Aluminum Castings Corp. v. Schuikins, Civ.App., 267 S.W.2d 174—Schoenberg v. Forrest, Civ.App., 228 S.W.2d 556, refused no reversible error—Gillette Motor Transport Co. v. Whitfield, Civ. App., 186 S.W.2d 90, refused for want of merit—Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Whiteman, Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 635, error dismissed—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Merchant, Civ. App., 81 S.W.2d 794—New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Chammess, Civ. App., 63 S.W.2d 1058, error refused. 64 C.J. p 1147 note 61.

Conclusion

Refusal of requested special question was not error, where the question called for a conclusion as distinct from a finding of fact.

64 C.J. p 1148 note 52.

Meaning

The issues should be couched in words of clear and certain meaning.—Gibson v. Central Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 62 S.E.2d 320, 232 N.C. 712.

Questions should not be submitted which are mis- | leading or confusing,⁶⁸ or indefinite,⁶⁹ nor should

Impossibility of answer

A jury should not be required to answer a question impossible to be answered from the evidence.—Walker v. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., 139 P. 2d 157, 157 Kan. 170.

Interdependent interrogatories

Refusal to submit requested interrogatories to jury was proper, where one interrogatory could not be answered without answering all the interrogatories, and some of the interrogatories could not be answered by a lay jury intelligently or with any degree of certainty as to correctness of answer.—Speece v. Industrial Commission, Ohio App., 70 N.E.2d 387.

Nature of injury

In suit to set aside workmen's compensation decision, nature of injury described in testimony should be incorporated in issue in at least a general way so that jury may not become confused as to specific matter and incorporate in verdict recovery for item of injury or damage not supported by testimony.—Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Pierson, Tex.Civ.App., 135 S.W.2d 550.

Preferable practice

In action involving allegedly fraudulent representations, use of word "represented" rather than word "stated" in submitting special issues is the preferable practice.—Shaddock v. Grapette Co., Tex.Civ.App., 259 S.W.2d 231.

Speculation as to facts

In compensation suit, special issue whether manifest hardship and injustice would otherwise result if lump-sum settlement were denied claimant was not subject to criticism that jury were permitted to speculate concerning facts which might constitute basis for lump-sum settlement.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Boyesen, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 1016, error dismissed, judgment correct.

The test of whether an issue is misleading or confusing is whether there is reasonable doubt of the clearness or understandableness of the issue by the jury.—McClelland v. Mounger, Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 901, error dismissed by agreement.

Redundancy

In workman's compensation suit, the use of the word "producing" in special issue inquiring of jury whether claimant's injury was a "producing cause" of claimant's condition of incapacity created a redundancy.—Safety Cas. Co. v. Walls, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 879, error dismissed.

Two propositions

The embodiment in one issue of two propositions, as to which jury might give different responses, is misleading.—Edge v. North State Felspar Corp., 193 S.E. 2, 212 N.C. 246.

questions be submitted which are vague,⁷⁰ or obscure;⁷¹ nor is it proper to submit interrogatories or special issues which are unintelligible,⁷² argumentative,⁷³ or ambiguous.⁷⁴ Also, it is not proper to submit to the jury questions which are technically bad,⁷⁵ questions which do not present the matter in controversy,⁷⁶ or questions based on the assumption that the jury will disregard the instructions.⁷⁷ A litigant is not entitled to have two issues submitted which are opposites one to the other,⁷⁸ and it is not ordinarily proper to submit questions which invite contradictory answers,⁷⁹ or tend to entrap the jury,⁸⁰ or which will result in apparently con-

Issues held not erroneous

Issues which were correctly framed in accordance with contentions of the parties on the only material issues in the lawsuit and which were in plain and simple terms and capable of being understood by any person of average intelligence were not error as being too technical or as being framed so as to make an answer less easy.—Clark v. Hefley, 238 S.W.2d 513, 34 Tenn.App. 389.

72. Tex.—McClelland v. Mounger, Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 901, error dismissed by agreement—Groves v. National Loan & Investment Co. of Detroit, Mich., Civ.App., 102 S.W.2d 508.

64 C.J. p 1149 note 57.

Use of term "canned advertising" in special issue was not erroneous as being unintelligible and without meaning.—Norm Co. v. City Drug Stores, Tex.Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 270.

Muncy, Civ.App., 65 S.W.2d 786, error dismissed—Texas Electric Service Co. v. Anderson, Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 142, error dismissed.

64 C.J. p 1149 note 59.

Use of expression

The expression "yielding the right of way" should be used in questions of a special verdict and in instructing jury only in the statutory sense.—Smith v. Superior & Duluth Transfer Co., 10 N.W.2d 153, 243 Wis. 292, rehearing denied 11 N.W.2d 95, 243 Wis. 292.

General agreement as to meaning

In workmen's compensation case, an issue as to what percentage of "maximum" permanent partial disability claimant had suffered was objectionable because of its ambiguity, but where it was shown that there was general agreement as to the meaning of the words actually used, error was not prejudicial.—Miller v. James McGraw Co., 42 A.2d 237, 184 Md. 529.

Immaterial fact

Special question was improperly submitted where it called for a finding on an immaterial fact.—Walker v. Coigate-Palmolive-Peet Co., 139 P.2d 157, 157 Kan. 170.

Issue involved held presented

Tex.—Deace v. Stribling, Civ.App., 165 S.W.2d 517—Ford Motor Co. v. Whitl, Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1032, error refused—Texas-Louisiana Power Co. v. Webster, Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 902, affirmed 91 S.W.2d 302, 127 Tex. 126.

Inconsistent questions

Where the questions submitted to the jury fully covered the ultimate issues of fact involved in plaintiff's cause of action, trial court properly refused to submit inconsistent questions requested by defendants going to matters of defense, since such inconsistent questions would have been cross-examination of the jury, which is not permissible.—Levandowski v. Verdict for plaintiff

In summary ejectment action, tendered issue whether defendant was plaintiff's tenant, and if so, did he hold over after expiration of tenancy, was properly refused, since either affirmative or negative answer would require verdict for plaintiff.—Stadium v. Harvell, 179 S.E. 448, 208 N.C. 103.

Questions held not objectionable

(1) In general.—Thompson v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 222 S.W.2d 442.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Menefee, Tex.Civ.App., 190 S.W.2d 150.—McGregor Milling & Grain Co. v. Tipton, Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 866, error dismissed, judgment correct.—Hicks v. Brown, Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 884, modified on other grounds 151 S.W.2d 790, 136 Tex. 399.—Abshire v. Reavis, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 1102, error refused.

(2) In compensation proceeding, issue of total incapacity and permanent character thereof requiring findings based on the preponderance of the evidence did not give undue prominence to the issue of injury or of partial incapacity.—Texas State Highway Department v. Reeves, Tex.Civ.App., 161 S.W.2d 357, error refused.

(3) In compensation proceeding where claimant alleged injuries to head, chest, and shoulders, court did not err in submitting separate issues whether claimant sustained injuries to each his head, chest, and shoulders, as against contention that court thereby unduly emphasized claimant's contentions.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Burns, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 391.

85. Tex.—Minchen v. First Nat Bank of Alpine, Civ.App., 263 S.W.2d 601, error refused no reversible error.—Bridwell v. Bernard, Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 981, error refused.—City of Austin v. 64 C.J. p 1149 note 72.

Affirmative and negative submission

(1) Trial court was not required affirmatively and negatively to submit the same special issue.—Koss v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, Tex., 267 S.W.2d 641.—Dreeben v. Sidor, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W.2d 908, refused no reversible error.—F. W. Woolworth Co. v. Ellison, Tex.Civ.App., 232 S.W.2d 857.

(2) It was not error to refuse employer's requested special issue as to whether injury was received while employee was doing act outside the course of his employment, where it was merely negative of instruction already given.—Anchor Cas. Co. v. Patterson, Tex.Civ.App., 239 S.W.2d 904, refused no reversible error.

Distinct acts of negligence

An issue of whether motorist was negligent in failing to exercise ordinary care in returning to right side of highway to avoid collision does not resubmit issue of whether motorist was negligent in driving on left-hand side of highway, since such constitutes an act of negligence separate and distinct from driving on left side.—McClelland v. Mounker, Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 901, error dismissed by agreement.

Erroneous proposition

It is error to submit to a jury an interrogatory based on an erroneous proposition of law.—McFadden v. Thomas, 96 N.E.2d 254, 154 Ohio St. 405.—Bredenbeck v. Hollywood Cartage Co., 110 N.E.2d 152, 92 Ohio App. 265.

Assuming duty where none exists

A question assuming an absolute duty on the part of a party, where no such duty exists, or assuming a broader duty than that resting on the rectly instructs the jury as to a matter of law each question need not specifically embody such matter.⁸⁸ Where a statutory liability is involved, statutory terms should be used in submitting questions to the jury.⁸⁹ So when negligence is predicated on failure to comply with some statutory rule of conduct or on the violation of a penal statute, the issue of whether the statute has been complied with or violated should be submitted in the language of the statute.⁹⁰ On the other hand, while a question reproducing the language of the statute which defines fraud, in asking whether fraud was committed, is not improper,⁹¹ ordinarily, in such circumstances, it is not necessary that the language of the statute be used, and it is better that it not be used if the substance of the matter can better or more simply be covered in other language.⁹²

It is generally required that an interrogatory or special issue be complete⁹³ and take into account all the elements necessary or proper to a determination of the question.⁹⁴ So also, the question or party, is improper and should not be given.

Damages

(1) In action for wrongful attachment and conversion of stock of groceries, special issues properly separated the actual damages from exemplary damages and did not result in an award of double recovery by plaintiff.—Coastal Transport Co. v. Fisher, Tex.Civ.App., 225 S.W.2d 995.

(2) Special issue on what damages would compensate plaintiff for injuries, with instruction that jury should consider loss sustained up to time of trial and what he would probably suffer in future and physical pain and mental anguish, if any, that he had undergone and would in reasonable probability suffer in future, was not erroneous as allowing double recovery.—*Airline Motor Coaches v. Negligence

(1) The trial court must include in an issue of negligence every essential fact necessary to constitute negligence.—Wells v. Ford, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 420, error dismissed.

(2) In submitting an issue as to negligence of a child in personal injury action, it is permissible to refer to age, intelligence, and experience of the child.—Davis v. Shafer, Tex. Civ.App., 222 S.W.2d 145, refused no reversible error.

Special issues held not erroneous

(1) In general.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Krasoff, 191 S.W.2d 1, 144 Tex. 436—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Talmadge, Tex.Civ.App., 256 S.W.2d 945, error refused no reversible error—Southwest Stone Co. v. (2) In suit in trespass to try title, special issue submitting question of adverse possession was not improper as omitting element of continuousness.—Reed v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 359, error dismissed.

(3) An issue whether jury found from a preponderance of the evidence that collision was not caused by an "unavoidable accident" sufficiently included the element of causation with respect to negligence.—Glazer v. Wheeler, Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 353, reversed on other grounds Wheeler v. Glazer, 153 S.W.2d 449, 137 Tex. 341, 140 A.L.R. 1301.

(4) In compensation proceedings, it is sufficient for trial court to submit an issue as to whether employee sustained accidental injury to his body on occasion in question, without necessity of setting out various injuries mentioned in pleadings.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Talmadge, Tex. Civ.App., 256 S.W.2d 945, error refused no reversible error.

95. Tex.—Martin v. Traders & General Ins. Co., Civ.App., 258 S.W.2d 142, error refused no reversible error—Highway Ins. Underwriters v. Carroll, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 378, error dismissed, judgment correct.
64 C.J. p 1150 note 76.

Damages

Special issue inquiring of jury what sum of money, if any, would fairly and reasonably compensate plaintiff for his injuries, if any, "directly and proximately caused by the collision in question," taking into consideration the enumerated elements of damage and none other, was not subject to objection that it did not limit the damages of plaintiff to those directly and proximately caused by defendants' negligence.—Grocers Supply Co. v. Stuckey, Tex.Civ.App., 152 S.W.2d 911.

The trial court is not warranted in assuming that jury will consider matters not in evidence in answering is-ssues submitted.—Southern Underwriters v. Thomas, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 409, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Special issues held not erroneous

64 C.J. p 1150 note 77.

Evidence applied to issues

Trial court, in submitting special issues, should frame questions to secure consideration of the evidence applied to the issues framed by pleadings and supported by evidence.—Thoresen v. Grything, 59 N.W.2d 682, 264 Wis. 487.

Conditional submission

(1) The conditional submission of a special issue was not objectionable on ground that issue informed jury of effect of their answer to previous special issue, although preceding the conditionally submitted issue jury was instructed that they would answer such issue only if they answered previous issue in affirmative.—Grieger v. Vega, Tex., 271 S.W.2d 85—

Ordinarily a question or special issue should not be phrased in the alternative,¹ but submitting different issues in the alternative is not error where there is substantial evidence to support each alternative.² It is not improper to submit the theory of one party separate from that of the other.³

case,⁴ and the mere fact that a question might be more aptly drawn or its form improved does not make it erroneous.⁵ In other words, the test of the sufficiency of special issues is whether they cover all pertinent evidence and fairly apply it,⁶ and they will be upheld when they present proper inquiries as to all determinative facts in dispute and afford the parties the opportunity to introduce and fairly apply all pertinent evidence.⁷ If the issues

(2) In workmen's compensation proceeding, wherein special issue required jury to find how many weeks of total incapacity, if any, employee sustained or would sustain by reason of injury suffered, only if jury should find in response to another special issue that such incapacity was temporary, it was proper for trial court to make first special issue corollary to, and dependent on, answer to second special issue, as against contention that jury was thereby advised of legal effect of their answers.—United Employers Casualty Co. v. Oden, Tex. Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 114.

(3) Property of conditional submission see infra subdivision c of this section.

2. Mo.—Cross v. Fletcher, App., 216 S.W.2d 101.

Alternative defenses

The fact that issue of unavoidable accident in automobile collision case was based on same alleged acts of negligence as was issue of sole proximate cause did not preclude court from submitting both issues on theory that where two issues are raised by same pleadings or evidence court may properly submit either issue, but not both, since a party may urge alternative and even inconsistent defenses.—Schuhmacher Co. v. Holcomb, 177 S.W.2d 951, 142 Tex. 332.

Partial incapacity

Where employee's main contention was that he had suffered total permanent incapacity, and he requested compensation for incapacity of less serious nature only in alternative, and insurance carrier's answer to such contentions was simply general denial, submitting issues with respect to partial incapacity only in alternative was proper.—Texas Employers Ins. Other statements of rule

(1) Issues presenting to jury proper inquiries as to all essential matters or determinative facts in dispute are sufficient.—Green v. Inter-Ocean Casualty Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, 187 S.E. 38, 203 N.C. 767.

(2) Issues, arising on pleadings, sufficient to enable parties to present to jury their respective contentions as to law and facts, and sufficient, when considered in connection with admissions of parties in pleadings and at trial, to support judgment, are not exceptionable.—Furr v. Trull, 171 S.E. 641, 205 N.C. 417.

Language of policy provision

In suit for total loss of bananas damaged by refrigerating ammonia, under policy covering cost of replacement of material lost as result of explosion, submission of the issue of damages in almost the exact language of the policy provision was proper.—Cromble & Co. v. Full presentation of controversy

In action to recover for services rendered interstate, issues as to whether submitted by the court are sufficient in form and substance to present all phases of the controversy, there is no ground for exception to the issues.⁸ In the application of the foregoing rules, particular interrogatories or special issues have been held proper and sufficient in form,⁹ as in negligence actions generally,¹⁰ tort actions against municipalities,¹¹ and workmen's compensation suits;¹² but er plaintiff and intestate entered into contract, intestate breached contract, and plaintiff rendered services to intestate in good faith relying on contract and as to amount, if any, plaintiff was entitled to recover, fully presented controversy.—Price v. Askins, 194 S.E. 284, 212 N.C. 583.

Acts of negligence

In personal injury action, an interrogatory requiring jury, if they find defendant guilty of negligence, to specify his acts of negligence, is proper, and jury's failure or inability to find existence of claimed act of negligence is equivalent to finding on such claim against party having burden of establishing it.—Mills v. City of Cleveland, Ohio App., 117 N.E.2d 471.

In automobile collision case, question of defendant's negligence may be submitted to jury by inquiring whether defendant failed to use ordinary care in such respects as evidence may indicate, followed by instruction defining ordinary care.—Hoffman v. Rekling, 258 N.W. 347, 117 Wis. 66.

Speed

Question to jury as to whether defendant in action for injuries to one riding in automobile driven by him failed to exercise ordinary care not to increase danger assumed by plaintiff with respect to speed was held not to render verdict, exonerating defendant in such respect, fatally defective as making it impossible to determine whether jury concluded that he was not driving at excessive speed or that plaintiff assumed risk thereof.—Arch-er v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. Ry. Co., 255 N.W. 67, 215 Wis. 509, 95 A.L.R. 851.

Damages

(1) In personal injury action, court should have submitted plaintiff's requested special issue, "In the event that the plaintiff should be entitled to recover, at what sum should his damages be assessed?" instead of issue given reading, "What sum would reasonably compensate the plaintiff for his loss and injury which was directly produced by the derailment of train in question?"—Braun v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. M. Ry. Co., 172 N.W. 743, 170 Wis. 10.

(2) Use of phrase "and so forth," in issue as to damages in personal injury action, was held error—City of Beaumont v. Dougherty, Tex.Civ.App., 298 S.W. 631, affirmed, Com.App., 9 S.W.2d 1030.

Injuries and cause

(1) In workmen's compensation case, trial court should, by one or more appropriate issues, require jury to find whether employee sustained such accidental personal injuries, if any, as may be properly raised by pleadings and evidence, and, if jury should find by one or more appropriate issues that employee sustained such injuries, jury should then be required to find in a corresponding and corollary issue or separate issues as to whether the found injuries naturally resulted in, or was producing cause of, the incapacity complained of.—United Employers Casualty Co. v. Oden, Tex.Civ.App., 150 S.W.2d 114.

(2) Where employee in workman's compensation suit relies on a general injury, there is no need for special issue to describe injuries set forth in petition or for jury to find either separately or collectively that employee sustained either one or all of the injuries, but it is sufficient that jury find that employee sustained an accidental injury to his body.—Southern Underwriters v. Boswell, 158 S.W.2d 280, 138 Tex. 255.

Questions submitted in disjunctive

Special issues submitting disjunctively questions whether compensation claimant's incapacity was total or only partial, and whether plaintiff's incapacity had changed for better or for worse, were authorized by Civil Procedure Rule.—Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Brock, Tex.Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 281.

Lump-sum award

(1) Special issues inquiring whether jury found that injustice and manifest hardship would result to compensation claimant if lump sum were denied him in the event of the granting of a compensation award were proper in form and were supported by the evidence.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Abbott, Tex.Civ.App., 148 S.W.2d 465, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Issue of lump-sum payment was not erroneous because of use of phrase "instead of a lump sum."—Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Sims, Tex.Civ.App., 67 S.W.2d 445, error refused.

Facts submitted by charge

In compensation suit defended on ground of failure to file claim with Industrial Accident Board within six months from date of injury, requested issue whether employee prior to certain date had begun to doubt physician's statement that employee would recover from his injury, was properly refused, where issue was a mere negative submission of affirmative facts submitted by charge.—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Sufficiency of general charge

(1) Right of litigant to have jury properly instructed on burden of proof is valuable, and is not sufficiently protected by general charge that questions propounded to jury must be answered on preponderance of evidence.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Howie, Tex.Civ.App., 94 S.W.2d 220, error dismissed.

(2) It has been held, however, that failure to embody instruction on preponderance of evidence in special issues was not error, where general instructions relating to preponderance of evidence sufficiently protected appellant's rights.—Dennison v. Gilmore, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 542, error dismissed.

Form

(1) It has been said that the proper method of submitting a question to the jury is to include the element of burden of proof, by asking, "Do you find from the preponderance of the evidence that," etc., so framing the question on each issue of fact as to place the burden of proof where it properly belongs.—City of Waco v. Diamond, Tex.Com.App., 65 S.W.2d 272—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 350—Texas Steel Co. v. Negative answer

If direction to jury to answer issues "yes" or "no" had effect of informing jury that a negative answer to issues could not be made unless negative was shown by preponderance of the evidence, direction constituted error.—Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. King, 161 S.W.2d 483, 138 Tex. 473—Stevenson v. Wilson, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 317, error refused.

Affirmative defenses

Under statute placing on compensation claimant the burden of proof to establish the negative of all affirmative defenses raised by pleadings and evidence, the submission of special issues requiring jury to determine from a preponderance of the evidence whether or not defendant had established its affirmative defenses that claimant was at time of injury in the employ of both the company insured by defendant and another company jointly, and that claimant's incapacity was due to a disease rather than injury, was erroneous, as it placed the burden of proof on defendant.—Southern Underwriters v. Waddell, Tex.Civ.App., 144 S.W.2d 637.

Issues of fact are resolved from a preponderance of the evidence and special issues requiring a higher degree of proof may not be submitted to a jury.—Sanders v. Harder, 227 S.W.2d 206, 148 Tex. 593—Andrews v. Dewberry, Tex.Civ.App., 242 S.W.2d 685, error refused no reversible error.

Particular forms of submission held not erroneous

(1) Issues propounding questions to be answered from preponderance of evidence were not erroneous because concluding with statement that, "You will answer 'yes' or 'no,' as you find the facts to be."—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Huntsman, Tex. Civ. App., 125 S.W.2d 431, error dismissed, judgment correct—Willis v. Smith, Tex. Civ. App., 120 S.W.2d 899, error dismissed—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Burns, Tex. Civ. App., 118 S.W.2d 391.

(2) In the submission of special issues commencing "Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence," instructing jury to answer "he did not" or "he did," rather than "yes" or "no," in order to avoid confusion present when burden of proof rests on the one asserting a negative, was not erroneous as shifting burden of proof.—McDaniel v. Willis, Tex. Civ. App., 157 S.W.2d 672, error refused.

(3) Special issue in compensation proceeding whether injury, if any, that claimant received was caused by claimant's willful intention and attempt unlawfully to injure a fellow employee, was not erroneous on ground that it imposed burden of proof on insurance carrier and employer, where concluding line of issue provided that a negative answer to issue required a preponderance of the evidence.—Associated Emp. Lloyds v. Groce, Tex. Civ. App., 194 S.W.2d 103, refused no reversible error.

proposition, such form is not exclusive,²¹ and a question is not improper because asking whether the jurors believe, instead of whether they find, the matter.²² It is improper to state an issue in the form of a direction to the jury to find whether a certain fact existed, rather than to ask them whether they so find.²³

Use of technical or comprehensive terms. It is better practice to submit the specific issues of fact involved in a particular right or defense than to use a technical or comprehensive term,²⁴ although the latter is not necessarily improper.²⁵ The definition of a term used in a special issue should be as complete as the fact issues require.²⁶

Reference to pleadings. A question should be complete in itself, without necessitating reference to the pleadings;²⁷ but an interrogatory is not objectionable because referring to "the defendants" instead of mentioning them by name.²⁸ In other words, the better practice is to frame the issues to avoid reference to the pleadings,²⁹ but not every reference to the pleadings is erroneous.³⁰

Mistakes and irregularities. A mere clerical error in a special issue as submitted does not vitiate it where the meaning is plain;³¹ and the inclusion in a question of mere surplusage,³² or the use of a plural instead of a singular word,³³ is not objectionable where the jury cannot be misled thereby; nor is the use of two terms, alternatively or disjunctively, for the same concept objectionable where there is no controversy as to the matter referred to.³⁴ An irregularity or mistake is fatal, however, where the substance or effect of the question is thereby changed.³⁵

b. Affirmative or Negative Form

Interrogatories or special issues should be submitted to the jury in the affirmative, if possible, but in some circumstances they will not be held defective or confusing because submitted in a negative manner.

Term defined in another issue

In compensation suit, failure to define term "substantially the whole of the year" in submitting special issue relating to claim under provision of compensation act for determination of amount of compensation from average wage if employee has been employed in same employment for one year was not error, where term was correctly defined in submitting another special issue.—Southern Underwriters v. Garipey, Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 760, error dismissed.

"Malice"

Interrogatories which asked the jury to say whether malice was the gist of the action without explaining to the jury what the language of the interrogatories meant were objectionable.—Racine Fuel Co. v. Rawlins, 36 N.E.2d 710, 377 Ill. 375.

"Temporary"

In compensation proceeding, special issue on whether workman's total incapacity was temporary only was not erroneous for failure to define "temporary."—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Turner, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 593.

and ordinarily negative questions should not be submitted.³⁷ In some circumstances, however, a special issue will not be held defective or confusing because submitted in a negative manner.³⁸ Where the case permits defendant to prove an affirmative defense under a general denial and the testimony raises such affirmative defense, defendant is entitled to an affirmative submission of the defense;³⁹ but if the evidence offered tends only to negative the cause of action presented, the issue on which such action depends should be submitted affirmatively,⁴⁰ although the negation of such issue should not be affirmatively submitted.⁴¹ Good practice requires the elimination of a double negative in the submission of an issue to the jury,⁴² but the submission of an issue in a form containing a double negative

Discretion

In suit by claimant to set aside compensation award in favor of insurance carrier, where trial judge is confronted with question of whether issue of partial incapacity should be submitted in affirmative or negative form, he should in his discretion employ the form of issue the answer to which can be made the basis of a judgment and at the same time serve the diverse purposes of both parties, and his discretion is controlling if neither party suffers denial of substantial right.—Wright v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 123 S.W.2d 314, 132 Tex. 172.

(1) In general.—Southern Underwriters v. Mowery, Tex.Civ.App., 147 S.W.2d 834, error dismissed, judgment correct.—Gelstmann v. Schkade, Tex.Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 494.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Snow, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 682, error dismissed.

(2) In action for injuries sustained in an automobile collision, special issue whether automobile in which plaintiff was riding was on the "wrong" side of the road at the time of the collision was not objectionable on the ground that it was submitted in the negative rather than in the positive form, since plaintiff had burden of showing what was the sole proximate cause of his injuries and jury found it was exclusively due to the act of the driver of his automobile in driving on the left side of the road.—Parker v. Jakovich, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 790, error dismissed.

37. Kan.—Mid-Continent Tire Mfg. Co. v. Motor Equipment Co., 298 P. 659, 111 Kan. 719.

Defense

In action against employer for injuries sustained in automobile collision, issue submitting employer's defense in form whether employee, during his journey, did not form and act on any intention to set aside employer's business and go on some other mission not related to his employment fairly submitted employer's defense to jury, although negatively, since submission in affirmative language would have wrongfully placed burden of proof on employer.—Ford Motor Co. v. Whitt, Tex.Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1032, error refused.

Incapacity

(1) Where trial court submitted every element of total, permanent incapacity of employee, insurer's requested issue of whether employee's incapacity was temporary was properly refused as a negative submission of issue of employee's permanent incapacity.—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Read, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 440, error granted.

(2) In suit by claimant to set aside compensation award in favor of insurance carrier, where evidence raised issues of both total and partial incapacity, court was not required to submit issue of partial incapacity negatively as well as affirmatively.—Wright v. Traders & General Ins. Co., 123 S.W.2d 314, 132 Tex. 172.

Unavoidable accident

(1) Where plaintiff in action for injuries or death has burden of proving that injury was not the result of an unavoidable accident, jury should be instructed that in the event their finding is in the affirmative the form of the answer should be, "It was not an unavoidable accident," and, otherwise, the answer should be "No."—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Guin, 116 S.W.2d 693, 131 Tex. 548, 116 A.L.R. 795.—Marosis v. Nira, Tex.Civ.App., 125 S.W.2d 404, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Where special issue is whether injuries were "not" result of unavoidable accident, better practice is to instruct jury to answer that it was, or was not, unavoidable accident rather than "yes" or "no."—Three States Telephone Co. v. Kirkwood, Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 588.

(3) Submission of special issue in form "Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence, if any, that the death of" employee "was not the result of an unavoidable accident as to the defendant" employer? "Answer 'It was the result of an unavoidable accident' or 'It was not the result of an unavoidable accident'" was not erroneous.—Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co. of Texas v. McKinney, Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 789, affirmed Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. McKinney, 145 S.W.2d 1081, 138 Tex. 75.

(4) However special issue whether automobile collision was not an unavoidable accident, to be answered it was not an unavoidable accident or it was an avoidable accident, constituted reversible error as restricting jury to an affirmative answer.—Page v. Rogers, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 716.

Work during year

In action to recover compensation for employee's death, trial court did not err in submitting to jury, at plaintiffs' request, issue in negative form as to whether they found that deceased did not work substantially whole of year immediately preceding date of his death in same employment as on such date.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Yarbrough, Tex.Civ.App., 181 S.W.2d 305.

Preponderance of evidence

Submission of negative issues followed by request to answer "It was" or "It was not" was not erroneous as negating the right of a complaining party to have the question answered from a preponderance of the evidence.—Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Watkins, Tex.Civ.App., 135 S.W.2d 296.

39. Tex.—Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Ebers, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 797, error dismissed, judgment correct.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Offield, Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 359, error dismissed.

40. Tex.—Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Ebers, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 797, error dismissed, judgment correct.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Offield, Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 359, error dismissed.—Texas Indemnity Ins. Co. v. Perdue, Civ.App., 64 S.W.2d 386, error refused.

41. Tex.—Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n v. Ebers, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 797, error dismissed, judgment correct.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Offield, Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 359, error dismissed.—Texas Indemnity Ins. Co. v. Perdue, Civ.App., 64 S.W.2d 386, error refused.

42. Tex.—Southland Life Ins. Co. v. Barrett, Civ.App., 172 S.W.2d 997, error refused.

Purpose of special issue as to whether automobile guest was guilty and requiring a single affirmative word to indicate a negative answer has been held not erroneous as confusing the jury where the question only required careful consideration and not expert knowledge or more than average intelligence.⁴³

c. Conditional Submission

The trial court may, in a proper case, conditionally submit interrogatories or special issues, that is, it may submit an issue to be answered only in the event that a preceding issue is answered in a certain manner.

The trial court may, in a proper case, conditionally submit interrogatories or special issues, that is, it may submit an issue to be answered only in the event that a preceding issue is answered in a certain manner.⁴⁴ In other words where one or more issues are completely determinative of the kind of judgment to be rendered, the court may direct the jury to answer other issues only if they find such completely determinative issues in a certain way.⁴⁵ Generally, a conditional submission is proper where it presents a component part of plaintiff's cause of action, or a component part of a defense under a general denial, or a component part of an affirmative defense.⁴⁶ In some circumstances, however, a special issue may or must be submitted unconditional⁴⁷ and a conditional submission is erroneous where of contributory negligence in failing to warn driver not to operate automobile so as not to lose control was destroyed by use of "not" second time.—McWilliams v. Halley, Tex.Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 985, error dismissed.

Propriety of conditional submission as informing jury of effect of their answers see supra subdivision a of this section.

Practice commented

The submission of issues the answers to which are conditioned on how others are answered is commended, since such procedure is conducive to a speedy determination of the rights of litigants.—Kadane v.

Clark, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 448, reversed on other grounds 143 S.W.2d 197, 135 Tex. 496.

Form of submitting special issues. "If you have answered 'yes' to question No. — and 'yes' to question No. —, only in that event, then do you find * * *," was not improper.—Roadway Express v. Gaston, Tex.Civ. App., 91 S.W.2d 883, error dismissed.

Negligence

(1) Issue of negligence may be conditioned on issue inquiring as to defendant's actual or constructive knowledge of a condition.—Hopson v. Gulf Oil Corp., Civ.App., 237 S.W.2d 323, reversed in part on other grounds 237 S.W.2d 352, 150 Tex. 1.

(2) Where a plaintiff alleges a cause of action based on ordinary negligence and one of defendants or his insurer asserts that another defendant was guilty of gross negligence, question of defendants' negligence should be submitted to jury in the alternative accompanied by proper instructions requiring answer to questions with respect to ordinary negligence only if questions with respect to gross negligence are answered negatively.—Wedel v. Klein, 282 N.W. 606, 229 Wis. 419.

(3) In action for injuries sustained by motorman of electric train against railroad, fact that court submitted to jury issue of sole proximate cause of collision conditionally on a negative answer to preceding issues of discovered peril without submitting issue of primary negligence of railroad was not misleading in view of rule authorizing conditional submission of special issues where motorman was negligent as matter of law.—Hunter v. Texas Elec. Ry. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 194 S.W.2d 281, affirmed 68 S.Ct. 203, 332 U.S. 827, 92 L.Ed. 402.

Lump-sum payment

In workmen's compensation suit, submission of issue of lump-sum payment only on condition that jury answered special issue with respect to total incapacity in affirmative was not improper.—Texas Indem. Ins. Co.

v. Dunn, Tex.Civ.App., 221 S.W.2d 922—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Harwell, Tex.Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 460, error refused.

Submission held conditional

The words "if any" in special issue inquiring what percentage, "if any" of employee's incapacity, "if any" was due to previous injury, imported "condition," and the issue, while not in exact form in which conditional issues are usually submitted, was in effect a conditional submission.—Highway Ins. Underwriters v. Stephens, Tex.Civ.App., 208 S.W.2d 677.

Submission held not conditional

The use of the word "only" in submission of issue whether plaintiff had not sustained, and would not sustain only partial incapacity as result of injury did not make the submission "conditional."—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Scogin, Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 1014, error dismissed, judgment correct.

45. Tex.—Montgomery v. Gay, Civ. App., 212 S.W.2d 941—Harris v. Thornton's Department Store, Civ. App., 94 S.W.2d 849.

46. Tex.—Southern Underwriters v. Erwin, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 720, error granted.

47. Tex.—Southwest Stone Co. v. Symons, Civ.App., 237 S.W.2d 380, error refused no reversible error.

Amount of recovery

Where the amount of recovery, if any, is submitted, there is no necessity for a conditional submission of the issue, thereby hazarding the danger of apprising the jury of the effect of their answer on a previous question.—Kadane v. Clark, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 448, reversed on other grounds 143 S.W.2d 197, 135 Tex. 496.

In action on open account for cleaning and cementing oil well, submission to jury of issue whether plaintiff agreed to do work for stipulated amount, not exceeding maximum sum claimed by defendant, if jury answered in negative previous special issue whether defendant

it conditions an entire cause of action, or an entire defense which directly contradicts plaintiff's cause of action, or an entire affirmative defense.⁴⁸ Accordingly, the conditional submission of an issue to the jury is not ordinarily proper when it deprives defendant of the right to the affirmative submission of the main defensive issue in rebuttal of plaintiff's claim, a right which cannot be defeated by findings on other issues that indirectly negative a finding in defendant's favor on such defensive issue;⁴⁹ but this is not the rule when findings on other issues necessarily negative the defensive issue or where the evidence is insufficient to raise the defensive issue.⁵⁰ agreed to pay plaintiff by the hour, was erroneous as denying jury right to answer affirmative defense raised by conditionally submitted issue, in view of affirmative answer to previous issue.—Montgomery v. Gay, Tex. Civ.App., 212 S.W.2d 941.

Ordinarily, in a workman's compensation suit wherein the pleadings and evidence raise the issues of both total and partial incapacity, defendant has the right to the unconditional submission of issues relating to partial incapacity, and the submission of such issues on condition that questions as to total and permanent incapacity be answered in the negative is improper.⁵¹ Likewise, an issue as to the duration of total incapacity should ordinarily be submitted unconditionally.⁵² In some circumstances, however, under the pleading and evidence adduced, the conditional submission of particular issues as to total and partial incapacity and duration thereof has been held not erroneous.⁵³

692—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Cloud, Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 903, error dismissed—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Wright, Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 753, affirmed Wright v. Traders & General Ins. Wimberly, Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 343, error dismissed—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Shanks, Civ.App., 83 S.W.2d 781, error refused.

Before the rule was settled, there was some authority to the contrary.—Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. McDaniel, Tex.Civ.App., 102 S.W.2d 493.

Secondary issues

(1) Where court had submitted unconditionally primary issue of whether workman's compensation claimant was totally or partially incapacitated, court did not err in also submitting unconditionally secondary issues concerning partial incapacity, "if any."—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 152 S.W.2d 857, error dismissed.

(2) Where court had submitted unconditionally primary issue concerning whether compensation claimant was partially disabled after total disability ceased, submission of secondary issues concerning whether partial disability, if any, was permanent or temporary, conditioned on answer to previous issue, constituted reversible error in case in which jury found partial disability.—Southern Underwriters v. Wheeler, 123 S.W.2d 340, 132 Tex. 350.

52. Tex.—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Read, 158 S.W.2d 767, 138 Tex. 271—Texas Fire & Casualty Underwriters v. Watson, Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 496, error refused—Texas Indemnity Ins. Co. v. Head, Civ. App., 89 S.W.2d 283, error dismissed—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Wimberly, Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 343, error dismissed.

found from a preponderance of the evidence that total incapacity of compensation claimant was not and would not be only temporary was an "affirmative and unconditional submission" of the issue of total incapacity.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Scogin, Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 1014, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) In compensation proceeding, a special issue inquiring for what period of time, if any, of such total incapacity, if any, jury found from a preponderance of evidence was sustained by employee from and after beginning date, if any, and directing that jury answer question with word "permanent" or by stating number of weeks, if any, or with word "none," was not objectionable as a conditional submission of issue.—Southern Underwriters v. Cooper, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W.2d 563, error dismissed, judgment correct.

§ 542. — By Whom Prepared

Special interrogatories are ordinarily to be prepared by counsel for the party desiring their submission, but the court is not obliged to require interrogatories to be answered in the form prepared by counsel, and may submit questions in language varying from that of the request.

Special interrogatories desired to be submitted to the jury are ordinarily to be prepared by counsel for the party desiring such submission.⁵⁴ According to some authority, if a request for a special finding is submitted at all, it should be in the form requested by counsel, where that accords with the evidence,⁵⁵ but it has also been held that the court is not obliged to require interrogatories to be answered in the form prepared by counsel,⁵⁶ and may submit questions in language varying from that of the request.⁵⁷ So a party cannot complain because a particular issue was not submitted to the jury in the form tendered by him.⁵⁸ Where requested interrogatories are numerous, and some are not proper to be given, the court after striking the improper questions may direct counsel to rearrange or recopy the others.⁵⁹

§ 543. — Number of Interrogatories

The number of special interrogatories or issues to be submitted to the jury rests largely in the discretion of the court, but such number of questions should be submitted as is necessary to cover each issuable fact.

The number of special interrogatories or issues to be submitted to the jury rests largely in the discretion of the court.⁶⁰ The questions submitted should not unnecessarily be so numerous as to confuse the jury,⁶¹ or to consume the time of the jury and court to no proper purpose,⁶² or, in the case of special interrogatories, to amount to a cross-examination of the jury on their verdict,⁶³ and questions should not be multiplied for an ulterior purpose.⁶⁴

Offield, Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 359, error dismissed.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Hilderbrandt, Civ. App., 80 S.W.2d 1031, reversed (no opinion).

Grounds of recovery

Where compensation claimant sought to recover only for total permanent disability and insurance carrier answered only by a general denial, trial court did not err in submitting issue of temporary incapacity conditioned on a negative answer to issue pertaining to total and permanent incapacity, since issue conditionally submitted constituted grounds of recovery rather than grounds of defense, and failure of court to submit it at all could be of no concern to insurance carrier.—Federal Underwriters Exchange v. Woods, Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W.2d 285, error granted.

Alternative pleading

Where claimant in workmen's compensation case alleged that injury to his eye resulted in total permanent loss of vision thereof and, in alternative, that it resulted in partial permanent loss of such vision, compensation insurer which answered such allegations by general denial and did not further plead affirmatively that partial incapacity followed that of temporary total incapacity was not entitled to the unconditional submission of independent issues inquiring as to duration of either temporary total or partial incapacity.—Employers' Reinsurance Corporation v. Restrictions

Number of issues submitted to jury are within judge's sound discretion, subject to restrictions that they must be fact issues raised by pleadings, and that parties shall have opportunity to present any view of law arising from evidence.—J. B. Colt Co. v. Barber, 170 S.E. 663, 205 N.C. 170.

Statutory limitation

(1) Under statute providing that no party shall be entitled as matter of right to request more than ten special questions, where court submitted thirteen out of fifteen questions requested by defendants, refusal to submit the other two questions was not an abuse of discretion.—Morrison v. Hawkeye Casualty Co., 212 P.2d 633, 168 Kan. 303.

(2) Refusal to submit questions requested by plaintiff was held not error, in view of statutory limitation, where ten of eighteen questions submitted were requested by plaintiff.—Hamilton v. Lanoue, 67 P.2d 574, 145 Kan. 768.

Advisory answers

In administrator's action to quiet title wherein defendants filed cross complaint for specific performance of intestate's oral agreement to convey realty, refusal to give additional interrogatories requested by administrator was not error, where jury's answers to interrogatories given were advisory only.—Stewart v. Schnepf, 158 P.2d 529, 62 Ariz. 440.

However, the mere fact that numerous questions are requested or submitted does not necessarily show their impropriety, since more findings are required to develop the essential facts in a lengthy and involved case than in simpler ones.⁶⁵ In submitting a case on special issues, such number of questions should be submitted as is necessary to cover each issuable fact.⁶⁶ So a single issue,⁶⁷ or a small number of issues,⁶⁸ is ordinarily sufficient where each party's contentions, and the whole case, are fully and amply presented thereby; but where a cause involves two or more elements, to which different principles of law are respectively applicable, it is better practice to submit more than one issue.⁶⁹

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision at intersection, court did not abuse its discretion in submitting to jury more than ten special questions, some of which contained several subdivisions, in absence of any affirmative showing of prejudice.—Earhart v. Tretbar, 80 P.2d 4, 148 Kan. 42.

Wis.—Jensen v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 128 N.W. 982, 145 Wis. 326.

Fundamental facts

In action for malicious prosecution, questions submitted to jury to establish facts on which probable cause may be decided by the court should be limited to fundamental facts and they should be as few in number as the evidence in case will permit.—Simpson v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 57 A.2d 571, 162 Pa.Super. 371.

Amount of recovery

Submission to jury of single issue as to how much, if anything, plaintiff may recover is erroneous, where other issues are raised by pleadings.—J. B. Colt Co. v. Barber, 170 S.E. 663, 205 N.C. 170.

Single defense

In holder's action on note wherein maker claimed that he was to receive shares of stock and membership in a hunting club to be organized by payee and another, maker was not entitled to have such defense submitted to jury three times merely because in his pleadings maker had pleaded such defense as constituting want of consideration, a failure of consideration, and fraud and misrepresentation in procurement of the note by payee.—Ross v. Cook, Tex.Civ. App., 151 S.W.2d 854, error refused.

Corollary issues

In suit to recover damages for fraudulent misrepresentations inducing plaintiff to purchase oil royalty acreage from defendant, submission to jury of issues as to defendant's representations of recoverable value of oil under land purchased and prices per acre for which royalty involved was selling without submitting corollary issues on measure of damage fixed by statute as difference between value of property as represented and its actual value as delivered at time of sale contract was insufficient, even though jury might conceivably have arrived at same result under such manner of presentation.—Bryant v. Stohn, Tex.Civ.App., 260 S.W.2d 77, error refused no reversible error.

Accidental injury

In employee's suit against workmen's compensation insurance carrier, special issue submitting question whether jury found from preponderance of evidence that plaintiff sustained accidental personal injury as alleged in his petition should be framed in such language as would confine jury to consideration of allegations that were supported by evidence.—Southern Underwriters v. Thompson, Tex.Civ.App., 127 S.W.2d 389, error dismissed.

§ 544. — Conformity to Issues

Special interrogatories or special issues submitted to the jury for a finding should be so framed as neither to narrow nor enlarge the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence, but they should be cast in such manner as to conform and be confined to such issues.

Under the general rule discussed supra § 531, that there should be submitted to the jury all the controverted material issues or questions of fact, and those only, that are properly raised by the pleadings and supported by the evidence, special interrogatories or special issues submitted to the jury for a finding should be so framed as neither to narrow nor enlarge the issues presented by the pleadings and evidence,⁷⁰ but they should be cast in such a manner as to conform and be confined to such issues.⁷¹ This rule has been applied with

Although it cannot be urged that in any situation involving negligence one can avoid the obligation of exercising ordinary care for his own safety and for the protection of others, it is not proper to present general propositions of law, which in themselves may be sound, in special interrogatories unless there is some specification which limits them to the issues immediately at hand and permits their application in the light of the rights and obligation of the parties.—*Keller v. Substantial conformity

The only requirement is that a special issue be substantially within the

§ 545. — Interrogatories Covering More than One Matter of Fact

Independent issues of fact may or should be separately submitted, and an interrogatory or issue is objectionable where it is duplicitous or multifarious, in combining two or more fact issues in one question; but the grouping of interdependent facts in a single question or issue, as distinguished from the grouping of ultimate issues, is permissible.

Under the general rule discussed supra § 541 that each special interrogatory or special issue must call for a finding on a single question of fact, independent issues of fact may or should be separately submitted,⁸² and an interrogatory or issue is objectionable where it is duplicitous or multifarious, in com-

Trial court has duty to submit to the jury separately, without any commingling, each independent, determinative, controverted issue of fact raised by the pleadings and the evidence, which could constitute a basis for judgment against defendant.—Thompson v. Erisman, Civ.App., 157 S.W.2d 439, affirmed Erisman v. Thompson, 167 S.W.2d 731, 140 Tex. 361.

Ultimate fact or issue

(1) Only one ultimate issue may be submitted in single special issue.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Eubanks, Civ.App., 240 S.W.2d 811, reversed on other grounds Eubanks v. Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n, 246 S.W.2d 467, 151 Tex. 67.

(2) Question to be answered "yes" or "no" is "multifarious" which submits to jury more than one ultimate, independent, determinative fact.—Gulf States Utilities Co. v. Woodriddle, Tex.Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 325.

Unles interdependent

Requested issues must be submitted separately, unless issues are wholly interdependent.—Bewley Mills v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 201, error dismissed.

Grouping issues so as to call for general verdict

Where a cause is to be submitted to the jury on special issues, it is improper for the court to group the facts and special issues in such manner as to call for a general verdict.—Workmen's Loan & Finance Co. v. Dunn, Tex.Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 370—64 C.J. p 1153 note 29 [a].

Limitation title

In determining whether a party has acquired limitation title to a tract of realty by adverse possession for statutory period, splitting of issues along geographic lines should not be required, unless it is demonstrated that failure to do so will create confusion either in deliberation or in answers.—Parr v. Ratisseau, Tex.Civ.

App., 236 S.W.2d 503, error refused no reversible error.

Negligence

(1) In action for injuries sustained in drinking from bottle of carbonated beverage containing glass, submission of issues of negligence in one general question would be reversible error.—Texas Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Wimberley, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 860, error dismissed.

(2) Proximate cause is essential part of plaintiff's cause of action for negligence and must be affirmatively submitted to jury as independent fact, even though act charged constitutes negligence as matter of law.—Echols v. Duke, Tex.Civ.App., 102 S.W.2d 483, error dismissed.

(3) In action against a railroad for the loss of turkeys which were run over by a train, the question of the negligence of the railroad and the proximate cause of that negligence should not be embraced in the inquiry as to the amount of damages.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Heathington, Tex. Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 495.

(4) Where plaintiff relies on the doctrine of discovered peril, each of the elements of the doctrine should be submitted to jury separately as special issues.—Turner v. Texas Co., 159 S.W.2d 112, 138 Tex. 380.

Liberal construction of statute

Statute condemning multifarious questions must be liberally construed to effect statutory purpose to enable losing party to know with certainty the facts found by jury which constitute basis of judgment against him.—Gulf States Utilities Co. v. Woodriddle, Tex.Civ.App., 90 S.W.2d 325.

Possible different answers

Special issue propounding two questions one of which could be answered no and the other yes was multifarious and duplicitous and was therefore an improper issue to be submitted to jury.—Buss v. Shepherd, Tex.Civ. App., 240 S.W.2d 382, refused no reversible error.

(2) Issue submitting whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing, "if he did," to keep proper lookout as he approached intersection after seeking truck.—Kasch v. Anton, Tex.Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1097.

(3) Special issue whether negligence of railway was proximate cause of death to one cow and injury to other cattle.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hill Bros., Tex. Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 432.

(4) Special question seeking to ascertain not only what caused death of minor bicyclist but also what brought it about.—Morrison v. Hawkey Casualty Co., 212 P.2d 633, 168 Kan. 303.

(5) Issue whether plaintiff was "ready," willing, and able to pay for oil and gas lease, an alleged contract for which he was seeking to specifically enforce.—Bradley v. Howell, Tex.Civ.App., 128 S.W.2d 547, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Conjunctive

When special question asked jury puts more than one question conjunctively and answer thereto is in negative, verdict is fatally defective because of impossibility of knowing whether all of jury found in negative on each question included.—Vlasak v. Gifford, 21 N.W.2d 648, 248 Wis. 328.

Contributory negligence

Generally, submitting contributory negligence as one issue would be error, since negligence of plaintiff is not a defense unless it is a proximate cause of the injury.—Clasco & N. E. Ry. Co. v. McCharen, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 844.

Wis.—Catlin v. Schroeder, 253 N.W. 187, 214 Wis. 419.
64 C.J. p 1155 note 32.

One controversial fact

A special issue is not duplicitous if it includes only one controversial fact.—Alamo Downs, Inc. v. Briggs, Tex. Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 733, error dismissed.

Acceptance of delivery

Special issue as to whether plaintiff was ready, able, and willing to accept delivery of, and to pay for, tractor and equipment which he bought, if any, was not duplicitous, where it was undisputed that plaintiff was able to pay for tractor, and only issuable matter was as to whether he was ready and willing to complete the purchase.—Page v. Hancock, Tex.Civ.App., 200 S.W.2d 421, error refused no reversible error.

Boundary dispute

Submitting special issue in boundary dispute as to which of three designated lines was true boundary was not erroneous as submitting more than one fact issue, where only one boundary was disputed and trial court would have found for complaining party had jury selected line contended for by such party.—Mid-Kansas Oil & Gas Co. v. Burton, Tex.Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 338, error dismissed.

64 C.J. p 1155 note 33.

fense, both of which must be answered in the affirmative or negative, as the case may be, in order to establish it, is not objectionable as embracing two matters.⁸⁷

The grouping of facts in a single question or issue, as distinguished from the grouping of ultimate issues, is permissible,⁸⁸ and where a question as framed necessitates a finding on an incidental or subordinate fact in order to answer it, no objection can be grounded on a failure to submit a separate question as to such fact.⁸⁹ The grouping, vel non, of items constituting a single ultimate fact issue goes to the manner and form of submitting the special issues and falls within the discretionary duties of the trial judge.⁹⁰ A single issue of fact, although consisting of or involving two or more elements, should be submitted as a whole and not in parts,⁹¹ although the contrary mode of submission has been held not to be reversible error;⁹² and questions should not be submitted which inquire as to the same issue in different forms.⁹³

In action against truck owner for injuries sustained by brakeman in collision between truck and train, wherein truck owner alleged that railroad failed to station a flagman or watchman at crossing, and in a separate paragraph alleged that railroad failed to provide an automatic warning signal at crossing, trial court did not err in combining in same issue, railroad's failure to place a flagman at crossing and failure to provide an automatic warning.—Gillette Motor Transp. Subsidiary facts

cial issue so framed is not duplicious.—Howell v. Howell, 210 S.W.2d 978, 147 Tex. 14.—Jones v. Scott, Civ.App., 266 S.W.2d 534, refused no reversible error.—Pullen v. Russ, Tex. Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 876, refused no reversible error.—Connell v. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co., Civ.App., 219 S.W.2d 835, reversed on other grounds 224 S.W.2d 194, 148 Tex. 311.

(2) Where a group of facts are relied upon to make up the ultimate issue, it is not only permissible, but often indispensable to group them and present them in a single inquiry, to enable court to ascertain if the ultimate end sought has been established.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Turner, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 593, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Component parts

Where issue is composed of several component parts or where it is necessary to limit, describe, or modify issue, rule against duplicity or multifariousness is not violated.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Rowell, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 613.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 1014, error dismissed.

Express or implied consent

In action for conversion of cattle covered by mortgage prohibiting sale, court need not submit separately questions whether mortgagee gave express or implied consent to sale.—Daggett v. Corn, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 1098, error refused.

Occupancy during different periods

In action to recover tract of land, where defendants supported their claim of title thereto under ten-year statute of limitations by evidence of their use and enjoyment of land for continuous period of at least forty-seven years, without interruption or admission of title in another, court erred in submitting to jury three issues as to whether defendants had title by reason of occupancy and claim for ten years during three different periods specified, instead of submitting question in single issue as to any ten-year period before filing of suit.—Pinchback v. Hockless, 158 S.W.2d 997, 138 Tex. 306.

64 C.J. p 1156 note 46.

Undue repetition of special issues should not be tolerated.—Tripp v. Watson, Tex.Civ.App., 235 S.W.2d 677, error refused no reversible error.

Undue emphasis

The submission of the same issues in legal effect more than once is error, in view of the undue emphasis that may thereby be given to the single issue in the consideration of the jury.—Dallas Railway & Terminal Co. v. Bishop, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W.2d 298.

Cause of death

In compensation case, defense that death resulted from natural causes and not accident should not be split up by submitting one issue inquiring whether death was due to natural causes and another inquiring whether death was caused by accident.—Le Beau v. Highway Ins. Underwriters, 187 S.W.2d 73, 143 Tex. 589.

Each pleaded group of facts comprising a cause of action or defense may or should be presented as a separate issue;⁸⁴ and questions splitting up causes of action or defenses should not be submitted.⁸⁵ Thus where more than one ground of negligence,⁸⁶ fraud,⁸⁷ or other tort liability,⁸⁸ or of contract liability,⁸⁹ is involved in an action, it is not proper to submit the question generally, but each ground should be separately submitted. However, where there is but one ground of negligence, the submission of more than one question based thereon may be objectionable as an improper repetition of plaintiff's theory,¹ and the fact that acts of two or more persons are involved does not require the submission of separate questions;² and where only a single contract is involved the fact that it was

Improper emphasis

It is proper to group facts constituting ground of recovery or defense relied on, but improper to emphasize each separate fact constituting the group by submitting separate issue thereon.—Hunter v. B. E. Porter, Inc., Tex.Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 774.

Theories or grounds of recovery

(1) Where plaintiff pleads two theories of recovery and evidence introduced is sufficient on both theories, trial court is required to submit separately ultimate controlling issues affecting each theory and to secure findings which will afford a basis for judgment to be entered by court.—Texas General Indemnity Co. v. Scott, Tex., 253 S.W.2d 651.

(2) Where alleged cause of action consists of more than one ground of recovery, issues constituting elements in different grounds of recovery may not be combined and submitted as single issue over timely objection that it is duplicative and multifarious.—Rudock Oil & Gas Co. v. Lemasters, Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 806, error dismissed, judgment correct.

One act of negligence

An issue grouping a series of facts as constituting one act of negligence is not objectionable as being multifarious, since the jury only may relate the several acts and from their relation determine whether they constitute negligence.—Wells v. Ford, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 430, error dismissed.

Overlapping issues of ultimate facts which relate to the same thing may not be considered as cumulative by jury in comparing negligence of the parties, but jury must be properly instructed to that effect when questions which are but cumulative as to such an ultimate issue are submitted.—Saley v. Hardware Mat. Co., 18 N.W.2d 843, 246 Wis. 447—

Guderyon v. Wisconsin Tel. Co., 2 N.W.2d 242, 240 Wis. 215.

Permanent or temporary disability

In action for workmen's compensation no error was committed in submitting issues of permanent and temporary disability disjunctively in the same question.—Texas Elmp. Ins. Ass'n v. Tate, Tex.Civ.App., 214 S.W.2d 877.

Personal injuries and damages

In action for personal injuries and damages sustained in automobile collision, separate issues should have been submitted as to amount of damages sustained by each injured person, and another issue as to amount of damage to automobile.—Bransford v. Pageway Coaches, 104 S.W.2d 471, 129 Tex. 327.

95. N.C.—Hoke v. Atlantic Greyhound Corp., 38 S.E.2d 105, 228 N.C. 332.

84 C.J. p 1155 note 45.

Inclusion of entire defense

In negligence cases the court must, in submitting separate defensive facts for the defendant, so frame the issue as to include the entire defense as alleged and limit the defense to the facts so alleged.—Graham v. Gatewood, Tex.Civ.App., 166 S.W.2d 768, error refused.

84 C.J. p 1146 note 36.

Limitation of rule

The requirement, that alleged specific acts of negligence be separately and distinctly submitted, is to prevent confusion of the jury, and it is not necessary, if jury could not have been misled or confused.—Wilkinson v. Gordon, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 961, error dismissed.

Different statutory requirements

In action for injuries sustained in collision between automobile and truck, wherein plaintiff pleaded and offered evidence to prove violation of each of three sections of the Penal Code requiring that vehicle be driven on right-hand side of highway, requiring driver to give signal before turning, and requiring each of vehicles proceeding in opposite directions to give the other one-half of the road, it was not erroneous to submit issue on each section.—Brown Express v. Henderson, Tex.Civ.App., 142 S.W.2d 685, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Several separate acts claimed to be sole proximate cause of injury should not be submitted in one issue.—Hicks v. Brown, 161 S.W.2d 790, 136 Tex. 399.

made with two or more persons does not necessitate the submission of separate questions as to each.³ So it is improper for the court to submit issues as made by the general allegation of negligence and also the specific allegations of negligence, thereby duplicating in effect the same issues.⁴

Where damages are sought for injury to land and crops, it is not necessary to submit issues as to damages to the land and crops separately,⁵ although it may be desirable to do so in order properly to present the questions involved.⁶ Where separate grounds of negligence are submitted by separate questions, the matters of proximate cause, reasonable anticipation, and contributory negligence should be similarly subdivided, and not be submitted in the form of a single or entire question.⁷

In accordance with the foregoing rules, particular questions or special issues have been held not objectionable as duplicitous or multifarious,⁸ and such adjudication has been made in actions involving

Negligence of two motorists

In action for death of pedestrian who was struck by one motorist and then run over by another motorist, submission of issue as to whether pedestrian's death was caused by motorists' negligence, and if so by which motorist, was not error as against contention that negligence of each motorist should have been submitted in separate issues.—*Lewis v. Uncontradicted evidence

Submission of single question to jury containing two issues was not erroneous, where uncontradicted evidence required that each of issues be answered in affirmative.—Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, Tex. Civ. App., 83 S.W.2d 1063, error dismissed.

Immaterial matter

There is no duplicity where single element issue is presented, even though there is combined within it immaterial matter such as an evidentiary issue.—E. A. Pierce & Co. v. Aronoff, Tex. Civ. App., 60 S.W.2d 796, error dismissed.

Efficient cause and procuring cause

In action to recover a sales commission, submitting "efficient cause" and "procuring cause" in same question asking whether jury found that plaintiff was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale did not render question multifarious, where in its charge the court defined efficient negligence generally,⁹ and in workmen's compensation suits.¹⁰

Combining of constituent elements

In automobile collision case, submission of issues embodying disputed fact elements as to whether lookout was kept, whether automobiles were under control, and if plaintiff and defendant were negligent in such particulars was not objectionable as duplicitous, where only combining was merely that of constituent elements going to make up ultimate issue of negligence.—Levy v. Rogers, Tex.Civ.App., 75 S.W.2d 304, error dismissed.

Damages

In motorist's action for injuries sustained in collision between automobile and motor propelled handcar at public road crossing, submission as one issue the amount of motorist's damages for pain, suffering and loss of earning capacity was not error as against contention that such elements of damage should have been submitted separately.—Allcorn v. Fort Worth & R. G. Ry. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 122 S.W.2d 341, error refused.

Discovered peril

(1) Where plaintiff relies on the doctrine of discovered peril, the submission in one issue of the second element of the doctrine is not objectionable as being multifarious or as an improper grouping of two issues, and such submission imposes no undue burden on plaintiff and gives defendant no cause for complaint.—Turner v. Texas Co., 159 S.W.2d 112, 138 Tex. 380.

(2) In automobile collision case, issue submitting question of discovered peril was not erroneous as submitting in form of general charge all the several elements of discovered peril, where several elements of discovered peril were so related and interdependent that elements should be connected into one to form ultimate issue.—Leap v. Brazier, Tex.Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 1213, modified on other grounds, Com.App., 121 S.W.2d 334.

(3) Special issue submitting discovered peril in railroad crossing collision was not multifarious because submitting conjunctively discovery and realization by defendant's engineer of deceased's position of peril, or because explaining the use of the means at engineer's command to avoid injuring deceased.—Burlington-Rock Island R. Co. v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 1002, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Unavoidable accident

In action for injuries to passenger in defendant's bus, colliding with trailer of approaching truck just after passing rear of laundry truck turning to right off highway in front of bus, definition of unavoidable accident in charge as unexpected happening of event not proximately caused by bus driver's negligence was not objectionable on ground that defendant was entitled to submission of two such issues as between bus driver and both lumber truck driver and laundry truck driver separately.—Airline Motor Coaches v. Fields, 188 S.W.2d 917, 146 Tex. 221.

§ 546. — Interrogatories Assuming Facts or on Weight of Evidence

A special interrogatory or special issue should not be so framed as to include or embody an assumption of any controverted or unadmitted fact, or as to amount to any indication of the opinion of the court on the facts or the weight or sufficiency of the evidence.

As a general rule, a special interrogatory or special issue should not be so framed as to include or embody an assumption of any controverted or unadmitted fact,¹¹ or as to embody a suggestion of the existence of any facts of which no evidence has been introduced;¹² and questions presented for special findings, which assume as true material facts in issue and not admitted, are improper and properly excluded.¹³ Accordingly, particular interrogatories or special issues have been held objectionable as assuming disputed facts,¹⁴ such as

Separate injuries

Where evidence in compensation proceeding indicated that two separate injuries to the same organ contributed to producing disease which caused disability, the two injuries together constituted the final ultimate issue and it was therefore proper to group the fact issues, necessary to make up the ultimate issue, in a single inquiry.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Turner, Tex.Civ.App., 149 S.W.2d 593, error dismissed, judgment correct.

shown,²³ or the evidence thereof is undisputed,²⁴ or where the fact follows as matter of law from facts established,²⁵ the existence of such fact may be assumed in framing an interrogatory or issue. Also, it is not improper to assume particular facts on the express condition that the jury shall find such facts in response to other interrogatories,²⁶ and a question is not objectionable where it conditionally assumes a fact, as where the mention thereof is qualified by the word "alleged,"²⁷ or by "any" or "if any,"²⁸ or where it is otherwise so framed as to require a finding of the existence of such fact before answering the question.²⁹

Interrogatories on weight of evidence. It is generally held that a special interrogatory or special issue should not be so framed as to amount to any indication of the opinion of the court on the facts or the weight or sufficiency of the evidence.³⁰ Ac-

Sustaining of injuries

Issue on proximate cause was not erroneous on ground that it assumed that one of plaintiffs sustained injuries, where, under undisputed evidence, that plaintiff did suffer injuries in form and manner pleaded, and only point at issue was extent of those injuries.—*Foster v. Collision

Question of special verdict inquiring whether driver of automobile which collided with rear of manure spreader on which plaintiff was riding was negligent with respect to suddenly reducing speed immediately before another automobile collided with rear of defendant's automobile should have been prefaced by statement that it was to be answered only if jury found in response to another question that second automobile collided with rear of defendant's automobile before it collided with spreader.—*Papenfus v. Usurpation of jury function

Interrogatory of special issue which is so worded as to indicate any opinion of trial judge as to verity of fact inquired about is error as usurpation of exclusive jury function and if wording be such as is reasonably calculated to have such effect and there is reasonable doubt whether it did have such effect, matter is reversed against issue.—Davis v. Error held not prejudicial

Error, if any, in the wording of special issue, which allegedly constituted a comment on the weight of the evidence in that jury was thereby told that employee suing for compensation suffered a partial incapacity to work as the result of a hernia, was not prejudicial to employer's insurance carrier, where jury found that employee did not suffer a partial incapacity, but suffered total incapacity, since verdict must be construed as a whole.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. § 548. Submission of Interrogatories

The particular manner in which special issues are presented to the jury is largely discretionary with the trial court.³⁹ It has been held that the preferable practice in submitting special issues to the jury is to submit all issues made by the pleadings and the evidence as issues submitted by the trial court, and not as issues submitted on request of either party,⁴⁰ but in some circumstances it is not improper for the court to state that the issues were given at defendant's request.⁴¹ It is not proper for the court to submit written special interrogatories to the jury in a sealed envelope, with directions not to open it until they have agreed on a general verdict, since the consideration of the interrogatories may assist the jury in arriving at a just verdict.⁴²

Time for submission. It has been held that, where by statute it is contemplated that instructions to the jury shall be given before the argument, proper practice dictates a like rule with respect to special interrogatories,⁴³ but it has also been held that the submission of a special issue after commencement of argument is not necessarily improper.⁴⁴ It has further been held that interrogatories should be submitted along with the instructions to the jury,⁴⁵ but in proper circumstances, the court may submit defendant's requested special issues after reading its main charge to the jury.⁴⁶

Order of questions. In the absence of statute or court rule, there is no principle of law as to the order in which segregated issues or interrogatories shall be presented to the jury for their findings,⁴⁷ the matter being one for the trial court to determine,⁴⁸ and the order or sequence in which questions are submitted is ordinarily immaterial.⁴⁹ It is usually preferable, however, that a question as to the amount of damages be submitted after or at the end of other questions, rather than in their midst.⁵⁰ Where an action for injuries sustained is submitted to the jury on issues of discovered peril and unavoidable accident, the issue of unavoidable accident should be submitted first instead of last.⁵¹

Grouping or numbering questions. Interrogatories should not be submitted or numbered in sets,

(2) Submitting groups of questions on issues of negligence and of contributory negligence and on such issues charging jury if they answered preceding question "yes" and only in that event, to answer following question was not improper on ground that such manner of submitting issues was equivalent to telling jury the effect of their answers and constituted a guide to jury as to how to answer issues.—Gray v. Adolph, Tex. Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 122, error refused.

ted in such manner that the jury do not understand their duty with respect to answering, their answers cannot be used to support a general verdict.—Morrison v. Stepp's Beauticians, Inc., 115 N.E.2d 888, 95 Ohio App. 1.

Rule of civil procedure

In compensation proceeding, rule of civil procedure requiring trial judge to read to jury his charge and all requested instructions, special issues, definitions, and explanatory instructions before the argument is begun was required to be construed in light of the letter of transmittal of the rules asking for a liberal interpretation thereof; such rule did not announce a principle of substantive law.—Texas State Highway Depart-but submitted as an entirety and numbered consecutively from first to last.⁵²

§ 549. Amendment or Modification of Interrogatories

The court may in a proper case amend interrogatories or special findings submitted.

The court may in a proper case amend interrogatories or special findings submitted.⁵³ Thus the court may amend or modify interrogatories so as to make them relate to ultimate instead of evidentiary facts,⁵⁴ or make them proper in form⁵⁵ or pertinent to the issues,⁵⁶ or to correspond with the facts involved.⁵⁷ The court may prepare others in its discretion, where those submitted are not adequate or in proper form.⁵⁸

§ 550. Withdrawal of Interrogatories

Where requested interrogatories are pertinent and material, the court cannot, over the objection of the party at whose instance they were submitted, withdraw them from the jury; but where it is discretionary with the court to submit a special interrogatory the court has the discretion to withdraw it before it is answered.

Where requested interrogatories submitted are pertinent and material, it has been held that the court cannot, over the objection of the party at whose instance they were submitted, withdraw them from the jury,⁵⁹ particularly after the jury have deliberated on them.⁶⁰ Where the right of recovery is based on the answers to the interrogatories, the court may not withdraw the questions, although the jury cannot agree on the answers thereto,⁶¹ nor can it after general verdict permit the withdrawal of special questions at the instance of the party who submitted them and over the objection of the opposite party.⁶² Where it is discretionary with the court to submit a special interrogatory, the court has the discretion to withdraw it before it is answered,⁶³ which action will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of abuse, as considered in Appeal and Error § 1615.

If the court inadvertently submits questions which, on mature deliberation, it concludes are improper, it has the inherent power to withdraw such questions.⁶⁴ An interrogatory which does not serve the purpose and functions of interrogatories may, at any time before answer, be withdrawn.⁶⁵ The court may withdraw a question embracing an evidentiary fact,⁶⁶ or one, the answer to which would not be controlling of the general verdict,⁶⁷ or may withdraw questions, the answers to which are embodied in other findings.⁶⁸ Under certain circumstances the court may conditionally withdraw an issue from consideration by the jury.⁶⁹

What amounts to withdrawal. Receiving a general verdict without requiring an answer to a special interrogatory is equivalent to the withdrawal of the question.⁷⁰ The rule does not apply where the question is answered, although not in proper form.⁷¹

§ 551. Sufficiency of Verdict or Findings

- a. Special verdicts
- b. Special issues
- c. Special findings

a. Special Verdicts

In order to sustain a judgment rendered thereon, a special verdict must be sufficient and, as a general rule, it must find all facts essential to judgment and necessary to entitle the party having the burden of proof to recover.

In order to sustain a judgment rendered thereon a special verdict must be sufficient.⁷³ As a general rule, sometimes by reason of statute,⁷⁴ a special verdict must find all facts essential to judgment and necessary to entitle the party having the burden of proof to recover,⁷⁵ or at least the material facts which are in dispute.⁷⁶ Nothing must remain for the court to do but to draw conclusions of law.⁷⁷ The rule that a special verdict must find all the facts essential to judgment applies even though the evidence is undisputed;⁷⁸ but it is not necessary that a special verdict should find facts set out in the pleadings.⁷⁹ If a finding is based on conflicting evidence, the court is not justified in setting it aside.⁸⁰ The reasons impelling the jury to reach a finding need not be stated.⁸¹

A special verdict must be complete in itself,⁸² and cannot, as discussed infra § 557, be aided by intendment or extrinsic facts, although appearing of record, and unless the material issues are embraced in a special finding, it may not be regarded as a special verdict, as considered supra § 485. Where the moving party is not the one on whom the burden rests, his right to be awarded judgment does not alone depend on the presence of material facts, but he may be entitled to judgment by reason of the absence of some essential fact which it was incumbent on his adversary to establish.⁸³ All the issues need not be found in a special verdict,⁸⁴ but it is sufficient if facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, if within the allegations, are found.⁸⁵

A special verdict need not contain facts admitted by the pleadings,⁸⁶ but facts admitted by stipulation should, it has been held, be incorporated in the verdict.⁸⁷ A special verdict failing to find the amount of damages has been held insufficient,⁸⁸ but a verdict finding such facts as leave nothing for the court to do except to make a mathematical calculation is sufficient where a money judgment only is sought.⁸⁹

Form of verdict. It is not necessary that a special verdict be in any particular form,⁹⁰ but the verdict is sufficient if it be good in substance,⁹¹ considered in the light of the facts of the case,⁹² although unskillfully framed.⁹³ A special verdict may be in narrative form,⁹⁴ or in the form of answers to questions submitted.⁹⁵ The response of the foreman to an interrogation of the court, although assented to by the other jurors, is not a special verdict.⁹⁶ Although it has been held that it is the right and duty of counsel to prepare a form of special verdict,⁹⁷ the jury may make alterations therein or frame a special verdict themselves.⁹⁸

Admitted or uncontroverted facts. According to some decisions undisputed facts should be incorporated in a special verdict.⁹⁹ In some jurisdictions, however, the rule that a special verdict must find all the facts essential to recovery is satisfied if all the facts essential to a recovery, which are controverted by evidence on the trial, are specially found in the verdict¹ without a finding of material facts which are established by the undisputed evidence.² Facts not proved at the trial need not be stated.³

Itemization of damages. Except under statutory provisions requiring an itemization or special classification of damages,⁴ a general verdict is sufficient.⁵ Where recovery is sought for various elements or items of damages constituting separate causes of action, a verdict for a lump sum is erroneous.⁶ The fact that the jury assess the amounts found for various items of damage separately is not in any event erroneous.⁷ When different parties have each a distinct cause of action, covered by the same judgment, separate assessments should be made.⁸ If by consent two distinct cases between the same parties are submitted to the same jury the assessment should be made according to the evidence in each case.⁹

Special damages. In an action for personal injuries a general verdict for plaintiff is a prerequisite to entry of a verdict for special damages.¹⁰ Thus a verdict for plaintiff which assesses damages in the exact amount of the special damages claimed, proved, and submitted constitutes a verdict for special and not general damages which should be set aside for misconduct of the jury.¹¹

Actual and exemplary damages. Where both actual and exemplary damages are recoverable, the jury in some jurisdictions are required to specify in their verdict the amounts found for each,¹² but in others there need be no segregation of damages

where there has been no request for such segregation.¹³ It has been held to be discretionary with the court to require the jury to separate the findings as to actual and exemplary damages,¹⁴ and in at least one jurisdiction compensatory and exemplary damages are given, if at all, in a lump sum, and not separately.¹⁵ Where the jury are instructed that if they award both compensatory and punitive damages they should state the amount of each, a verdict for one amount only will be regarded as a verdict for compensatory damages.¹⁶

Where, in a case permitting an award of both actual and exemplary damages, a question is submitted requiring the jury to state the amount of actual damages sustained by plaintiff, such question must be answered in such a manner as to show that the jury as a whole agreed on some amount as actual damages and as exemplary damages.¹⁷ While the allowance of exemplary damages without a finding by the jury of actual damages is a departure from the general rule,¹⁸ a verdict which shows on its face that it is a finding for exemplary damages only is construed to be a finding not only for exemplary damages but also for actual damages that are merely nominal, and therefore not so substantial as to require expression in the verdict.¹⁹

so that no fact issue is left for the determination of the court.²¹ When a case is submitted on special issues, it is the duty of the jury to answer each special issue distinctly and separately,²² and without regard to the effect of their finding on the judgment,²³ and without regard to the relation of any answer to the other issues submitted,²⁴ the principal object being to have the jury find the facts and the trial court render such judgment as the law demands.²⁵ A finding is not essential as to matters not submitted.²⁶ The form of answers to special issues is immaterial as long as the jury's meaning is clear.²⁷

It is the duty of the jury to answer special questions as they find the facts to be from the evidence without regard to how their answers may affect the general verdict.

It is the duty of the jury to answer special questions as they find the facts to be from the evidence without regard to how their answers may affect the general verdict,²⁸ and they may not return divided

answers²⁹ or report how they stood if unable to agree.³⁰ A jury will not be required to answer special questions submitted where no evidence is introduced on which answers could be given.³¹ A direct answer should be given to each special question submitted, where the question is so framed that it will admit of a direct answer.³² It is not necessary that the answers of the jury to interrogatories framed by defendant should affirmatively establish plaintiff's cause of action.³³ Answers to special interrogatories, like a general verdict, must be announced in open court.³⁴ Where the special findings show that the jury found for plaintiff on a sufficient paragraph of the complaint, the fact that they also found for plaintiff on an insufficient paragraph does not vitiate the verdict.³⁵ If a general verdict is in writing and signed, it is immaterial that the answer to a special interrogatory is not in writing at the time, and it may afterward be received, as it is to be inferred that they agreed on an answer to the question before arriving at a verdict.³⁶

A finding in a special verdict or on special issues must be certain, definite, clear, unambiguous, and intelligible.

A finding in a special verdict or on special issues must be certain,³⁷ definite,³⁸ clear,³⁹ unambiguous,⁴⁰ and intelligible.⁴¹ Great certainty is required to enable the court to pronounce finally on the issues, and, applying the law to the facts, to render the proper judgment.⁴² A special verdict which is too uncertain to be the basis of a valid judgment is void.⁴³ Where a verdict is uncertain by reason of inconsistent findings, it cannot be cured by disregarding the uncertain portions, although the verdict is sufficient without them.⁴⁴ Certainty is not necessary as to immaterial facts.⁴⁵ The facts need not be found with greater minuteness in the verdict than they are stated in the pleadings.⁴⁶ Answers to material questions expressing only the inclination of the minds of the jury are not sufficient.⁴⁷ Such findings in a special verdict as "unable to say"⁴⁸ or "we think not" in answer to an interrogatory,⁴⁹ "on or about,"⁵⁰ and "approximately,"⁵¹ have been held insufficient.

b. Special Findings

Answers to material interrogatories propounded must be certain,⁵² definite,⁵³ and unequivocal.⁵⁴ Where the jury give answers from which it cannot be determined whether they accord or conflict with the general verdict, the verdict is bad.⁵⁵ Such answers to a pertinent question have been held in-

As a general rule, sometimes by reason of statute, the ultimate facts in controversy and not the evidence to prove them must be found by a special verdict⁶⁷ or special finding,⁶⁸ or in a case submitted on special issues.⁶⁹ The jury need not find evidentiary facts in a special verdict⁷⁰ or in a case submitted on special issues.⁷¹ However, where evidentiary facts stated are such that but one inference can be drawn therefrom, the absence of the statement of the ultimate fact in a special verdict⁷² or special finding⁷³ will not prevent the court from drawing the inevitable inference. When evidentiary facts leave room for difference of reasonable opinion, the party having the burden of proof must fail.⁷⁴

If an inferential fact and evidentiary fact are one and the same thing, it must go into the special verdict.⁷⁵ When facts are close to the line dividing the inferential facts from the evidentiary facts, the only safe plan is to put them into the special verdict;⁷⁶ if the court should conclude that they are evidential no harm results, whereas, if the court should believe that they are inferential facts their absence might be fatal.⁷⁷ The inclusion of evidence will not render the verdict defective if ultimate facts are found which warrant a judgment.⁷⁸ A special verdict finding what the law has made conclusive evidence of a fact is tantamount to a finding of such fact.⁷⁹

Conclusions. As a general rule, sometimes by reason of statute, the ultimate facts and not conclusions of law must be found by a special verdict,⁸⁰ special finding,⁸¹ or in a case tried on special issues.⁸² A special verdict which presents no other question than the relevancy of testimony adduced on trial is irregular.⁸³ A special verdict need not state conclusions of law,⁸⁴ and, where stated, they will be disregarded either in a special verdict⁸⁵ or special finding.⁸⁶ Conclusions of law do not impair a special verdict if, after eliminating them, there still remain sufficient inferential and ultimate facts, within the issues, on which the judgment can rest.⁸⁷ The findings of a jury which are conclusions of fact or of fact and law are improper;⁸⁸ but the inclusion of such improper matter does not invalidate the findings on matters properly submitted to the jury.⁸⁹

b. Matters Which Are Matters of Evidence, Fact, or Conclusions

reached by processes of legal reasoning from the evidentiary facts.

It is difficult to distinguish ultimate facts, evidentiary facts, and conclusions.⁹⁰ An evidentiary fact is one which furnishes evidence of the existence of some other fact,⁹¹ while an ultimate fact is the final resulting effect reached by processes of legal reasoning from the evidentiary facts.⁹² An inferential fact is an inference or conclusion from the evidentiary facts.⁹³ A finding in a special verdict that a note was paid is a finding of fact.⁹⁴ Where the issue is whether a party had sufficient mental capacity to make a gift inter vivos, a finding that the donor was of unsound mind is a conclusion of law.⁹⁵ The existence of usury is a conclusion of law from the facts found.⁹⁶ A finding that acts were done with a certain intent is a finding of fact.⁹⁷ Miscellaneous instances where a finding has been held to be or not to be a conclusion of law have been determined by the courts.⁹⁸

Conversion. A finding in a special verdict that a party converted property⁹⁹ or money¹ is a conclusion of law.

Negligence. A finding of negligence in a special verdict² or finding³ is a conclusion of law. A finding of contributory negligence or freedom therefrom in a special verdict is a conclusion of law.⁴

According to some decisions answers to special interrogatories accompanying a general verdict must be unanimous; but in some jurisdictions, by statute, answers by a number less than the entire jury suffice.

According to some decisions, answers to special interrogatories accompanying a general verdict must be unanimous.⁵ In some jurisdictions, by statute, a number less than the entire jury may answer special interrogatories.⁶ Where a number less than the entire jury may answer special interrogatories, an answer by the required number is considered the answer or verdict of the entire jury,⁷ and not merely the answer of the required number.⁸ Consequently, where less than the required number answers an interrogatory, the answer cannot be regarded as the answer of the jury.⁹

Where a special verdict is returned, each answer must be made by the same individual jurors if required by statute.¹⁰ Where this rule applies it has been held that at least ten, and the same ten, of the jury must agree on all questions essential to support the judgment entered on their verdict,¹¹ and if it is so agreed it is not necessary that all the questions submitted by the verdict be agreed to by the same ten jurors.¹² Thus, three or more jurors may disagree with respect to questions not essential to judgment because immaterial or because rendered immaterial by the answers found to other questions by all or ten agreed jurors.¹³

§ 555. — Authentication or Signature of Findings

There must be a compliance with statutory requirements with respect to the authentication or signing of special findings.

Where the statute requires that the general verdict be signed by the jury as a whole or by the foreman, as discussed supra § 495, or requires that special findings be signed,¹⁴ answers to interrogatories are not effective for any purpose where they are not signed as required¹⁵ and are not read to the jury by the clerk as their verdict.¹⁶ Although the statute does not require a signature to each answer, such is the better practice.¹⁷ The fact that

General verdict not to be received or journalized

General verdict held ineffective to support judgment

Where only eight members of jury of twelve signed special findings of fact submitted by interrogatories which were material to the issues in case and plaintiff objected to entry of general verdict for defendant before discharge of jury, general verdict was ineffective to support a judgment for defendant.—Bailey v. Great Lakes Greyhound Lines of Ind., supra.

Correction of verdict held not erroneous

Where verdict as first returned showed the same two jurors dissenting from answers to first six questions, and answer to seventh question relating to damages showed only one of the two jurors dissenting and showed another as also dissenting, and trial judge after examining verdict but before receiving it re-read instruction that at least ten, and the same ten jurors must agree, and jury then retired and later returned verdict corrected to show the same two jurors dissenting from answers to all questions, the correction of the verdict was not error.—Levandowski v. the foreman fails to sign until after the jury are discharged is not an error affecting any substantial right of the party complaining.¹⁸ Where the foreman signs the general verdict as foreman, his failure in signing the interrogatories to use the title of foreman is immaterial.¹⁹ Where the verdict contains a number of findings, the fact that the foreman signs each of them does not vitiate the verdict.²⁰ The general verdict is not necessarily vitiated by the failure of the foreman to sign written answers of the jury to special interrogatories submitted to them.²¹

Special verdict. Where required by statute, a special verdict must be signed by the foreman.²² Under a statute requiring a special verdict to be signed by the foreman, the signature of the foreman at the end of the interrogatories and answers is sufficient,²³ without his signature following the answer to each question.²⁴ Under some statutes where interrogatories are submitted for a special verdict the interrogatories and answers thereto completed and signed by jurors on the front page are not invalidated as a special verdict by the jurors'

failure to sign again following each answer or at the end of the list.²⁵

§ 556. Failure to Answer Interrogatories or Find Issues

- a. In general
- b. Special questions with general verdict

a. In General

It is the duty of the jury to find the special issues submitted, and where they fail to find on all the material issues submitted to them their verdict is incomplete, and except as may be otherwise provided by statute it will not support a judgment.

It is the duty of the jury to find the special issues submitted, as discussed supra § 551, and, where the jury fail to find on all the material issues submitted to them, their verdict is incomplete²⁶ or defective,²⁷ and except as may be otherwise provided by statute it will not support a judgment,²⁸ since the court cannot make such finding itself,²⁹ unless the evidence on the issue is without dispute and subject only to one answer,³⁰ nor can it substitute its

Where, in any jury case, material issues necessary to support a judgment are established conclusively by the evidence, or there is no evidence findings on an independent ground which has not been urged³¹ or dismiss the case on a ground that has been waived by defendant;³² and, where the jury are unable to answer the issues properly, a mistrial should be ordered.³³ Under a statute so providing, however, the trial court has authority to make findings as to supplementary facts or issues fairly referable to the issues submitted where the jury have found on the submitted issues.³⁴

The fact that some of the issues go unanswered does not necessarily render a verdict void or insufficient to support the judgment where the issues which are answered decide the merits of the case and warrant and support the judgment,³⁵ since when the jury answer some questions submitted, but fail to agree on others, the question as to whether the answers made are sufficient to enable the court to render any judgment is within the discretion of the trial court.³⁶ Further, a failure to answer one special finding is not fatal where the matter is covered by other answers,³⁷ but where the answer to other special issues does not cover a particular issue the latter should be answered.³⁸

A statute which authorizes the court to enter judgment in the absence of a finding by the jury on special issues has been held valid.³⁹ A statute providing that whenever any special verdict shall be submitted, and there is omitted therefrom some essential controverted matter, such matter shall be deemed determined by the court in conformity with its judgment is applicable to controverted matters omitted by the jury from a special verdict covering the issues raised in the action submitted,⁴⁰ which matter, under the statute, is deemed determined by the court in conformity with its judgment;⁴¹ but such a statute has no application to matters not embraced in the issues litigated at the trial.⁴²

Finding on one issue not answer to other issues

Finding in response to special issue that sheep sold were suitable for breeding purposes could not serve as answer to other special issues inquiring whether the sheep were infected with yellow liver and whether such infection rendered the sheep unsuitable for breeding purposes, since such issues submitted material factual elements of issue of breach of implied warranty as ground of liability for damages suffered by buyers as result of sale of the sheep.—*Rawls v. b. Special Questions with General Verdict

It is the duty of the jury to answer, and of the court to require them to answer,⁴⁴ all material questions submitted, even where the submission of such questions is within the discretion of the court.

It is the duty of the jury to answer,⁴⁵ and of the court to require them to answer,⁴⁴ all material questions submitted, even where the submission of such questions is within the discretion of the court,⁴⁵ although as to the duty of the court to require answer there is also authority to the contrary.⁴⁶ So it seems generally to be held that judgment cannot ordinarily be rendered on a general verdict where the jury fail to answer special material interrogatories.⁴⁷ As a general rule, however, a general verdict which disposes of all the issues is sufficient to support a judgment, although some of the specific questions which are submitted to the jury are returned unanswered, particularly where no objection is made at the time of the return of the verdict, or until after the jury have been discharged.⁴⁸ Similarly, error cannot be predicated on the failure of the jury to answer special interrogatories which the court did not call on them to answer,⁴⁹ where neither party requested an answer,⁵⁰ where the question is too general to require an answer,⁵¹ where the question would not have tested the general verdict,⁵² or where there is no evidence to authorize an answer.⁵³

fatal where another finding is made decisive of the whole case,⁵⁴ or where the question is answered by the general verdict,⁵⁵ or by the answers to other special questions.⁵⁶ The failure to answer questions, where the general verdict can be supported on other facts,⁵⁷ or where answers to such questions favorable to the party against whom judgment is rendered would not necessarily render the judgment erroneous,⁵⁸ will not be fatal; and, where the special findings do not embrace all issues, and those returned are not necessarily inconsistent with the general verdict, the fact that the incomplete findings are adverse to the successful party will not prevent a judgment in his favor if the issues and facts included in the general verdict, and on which no special findings are made, are sufficient to warrant a recovery.⁵⁹ If the jury cannot agree on the answers the court should refuse to accept a general verdict if it cannot stand without proof of the facts submitted.⁶⁰ Moreover, where two questions of fact are submitted with instructions as to the legal effect thereof and the jury return only a general verdict, judgment cannot be rendered thereon unless the evidence will warrant the jury in finding for the successful party as to both questions submitted.⁶¹ Under a statute providing that, where a special finding of fact is inconsistent with the general verdict, the former controls, if a finding in defendant's favor on a special interrogatory would not be inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff a failure to find on such interrogatory cannot control the verdict.⁶²

§ 557. — Aid by Inference, Intendment, or Extrinsic Facts

A special verdict must be complete in itself and cannot be aided by intendment or by extrinsic facts appearing on the record.

A special verdict must be complete in itself and cannot be aided by intendment⁶³ or by extrinsic facts⁶⁴ appearing on the record.⁶⁵ Furthermore, the court may not ordinarily consider evidence outside of the finding of the jury.⁶⁶ Likewise, special findings accompanying a general verdict are not to be aided by inferences⁶⁷ or intendments.⁶⁸

§ 558. — Immaterial or Inconclusive Facts or Issues

The jury need not find on immaterial or uncontroverted issues, or on other issues where those made are decisive of the whole case.

Thus, they need not answer a question or issue the answer to which has been rendered immaterial either by answers to other questions⁷⁰ or by reason of the fact that no evidence was introduced in its support,⁷¹ or where the issue relates more to a question of law than to one of fact.⁷² It is immaterial that the jury fail to make other findings where those made are decisive of the case.⁷³ Since only disputed issues of fact are required to be found by the jury,⁷⁴ they need not answer an issue where the evidence relating thereto is uncontroverted.⁷⁵ The court is authorized to disregard an unanswered issue where it is only evidentiary in character.⁷⁶ Interrogatories presented by defendant which state that they are to be answered if a verdict is given for plaintiff need not be answered on the return of a verdict for defendant.⁷⁷ Where, without objection, the court instructs the jury that if they answer the one question in the affirmative then they should answer another, and the jury answers the first in the negative it is unnecessary for them to answer the second.⁷⁸

§ 559. — Adverse or Negative Findings, or Disagreement

Where special findings fail to find a fact in issue, such silence will be regarded as equivalent to an express finding against the party having the burden of proof on such issue; but the failure of the jury to find on material issues is not tantamount to an adverse finding against the unsuccessful party on issues not included.

Where special findings fail to find a fact in issue, such silence will be regarded as equivalent to an express finding against the party having the burden of proof on such issue;⁷⁹ however, the failure of the jury to find on material issues is not tantamount to an adverse finding against the unsuccessful party on issues not included.⁸⁰ Furthermore, in some jurisdictions, equivocal answers are held to be equivalent to findings against the party whose case needs the support of the facts involved.⁸¹ A finding that a certain fact probably does not exist,⁸² or that the weight of the evidence justifies the jury in answering "no,"⁸³ sufficiently finds that the facts do not exist. An answer of "no evidence" to an interrogatory is a finding against the party having the burden of proof as to the proposition stated in such question.⁸⁴

While it has been held that the answer "do not know" constitutes a finding against the party having the burden of proof as to the matter involved,⁸⁵ unless there is a presumption in his favor which must be overcome by evidence,⁸⁶ and that a finding "can't answer" is in legal effect a denial of the existence of the matter contained in the interrogatory, operating against the party whose case needs its support,⁸⁷ it has also been held that the answers "do not know,"⁸⁸ or "not known,"⁸⁹ or "unable to determine,"⁹⁰ are ordinarily equivalent to no answer at all. A special finding of the precise acts or omissions constituting negligence is equivalent to a finding against plaintiff as to all other acts of negligence alleged or which might properly be proved.⁹¹

Disagreement. While failure to agree on an answer to a special interrogatory has been held equivalent to a finding against the party having the burden of proof,⁹² it has been held that a failure of the jury to agree on special questions leaves those issues undetermined⁹³ and is equivalent to a failure to answer the questions,⁹⁴ hence it does not amount to a finding thereon in the negative.⁹⁵ So, while it has been said that where the jury cannot agree on answers to the special interrogatories, or some material parts thereof, there is no verdict,⁹⁶ since, where the special verdict is the premise and the general verdict the conclusion, it is improper to permit the jury to state that they cannot agree on a special verdict and yet allow them to return a general verdict,⁹⁷ it has also been held that where the jury fail to agree on an interrogatory

and return a general verdict, the effect of the failure is to eliminate the matter embraced in the interrogatory, at least as far as it is sought to make it a substantive ground for recovery;⁹⁸ but where several grounds of recovery are alleged and an interrogatory goes only to one, the general verdict will stand notwithstanding a failure to agree on an answer to the interrogatory.⁹⁹

Where the jury disagree as to one special question although answering another question which in different language submits the same matter the answer will not support a judgment.¹ The jury will not be held to have agreed on interrogatories unless the agreement is arrived at in a regular manner.² Where there is no disagreement it is improper for the court to set a verdict aside on the ground that the jury practically disagreed.³ The court may make findings on all material fact issues on which the jury cannot agree, if the parties waive trial by jury.⁴

§ 560. — Returning Jury to Make Proper Answers

If the jury fail to answer special interrogatories or to find on material issues the court must require them to return to the jury room and answer or find on them properly, at least, where it is a prerequisite, on the request or motion of the party desiring such action.

If the jury fail to answer special interrogatories⁵ or to find on material issues⁶ the court must require them to return to the jury room and answer or find on them properly, at least, where it is a prerequisite, on the request or motion of the party desiring such action.⁷ However, where there is no evidence to authorize an answer,⁸ or where the matter involved in the question is merely evidentiary,⁹ or where the question is fully covered by answers to other interrogatories,¹⁰ or where the intention of the jury is plain,¹¹ as where the answer shows the basis of the verdict and the party entitled to recover,¹² the court need not require the jury to make a more definite or specific answer. Thus, where a fact, if found, is immaterial, it is not error to refuse to require a jury to make more specific answer to an interrogatory as to the existence of that fact.¹³

It has been both affirmed¹⁴ and denied¹⁵ that the court should send the jury back to answer an interrogatory which they say they are unable to answer. The party having the burden of proof on the matter involved may, on timely application, have the jury answering "do not know" to a question sent back for a direct response¹⁶ unless the question is immaterial¹⁷ or, it has been held, unless the evidence on the matter is conflicting.¹⁸ Where the question is material a refusal by the court to send the jury back for a definite answer may constitute reversible error.¹⁹ Where, in sending the jury back for more definite answers the court, without indicating its opinion as to which answer they should make, tells them that they may answer the question "yes" or "no" it does not thereby invade the province of the jury,²⁰ and there is no error in refusing a second request that the jury be required to make a more definite answer where they had once been retired for that purpose and had returned with a statement that they had answered to the best of their ability.²¹

Separation of jury. Where special interrogatories are submitted to a jury and they return a general verdict without answering them they may be sent back to find on them even where they have returned a sealed verdict and have been allowed to separate.²²

§ 561. Responsiveness to, and Conformity with, Pleadings and Evidence

Findings or answers by the jury must be responsive to the questions submitted, and must be responsive to, and supported by, the pleadings and evidence.

Answers by the jury must respond to the questions submitted to them.²³ However, substantial responsiveness is sufficient.²⁴ Answers which do not respond to the questions or issues submitted do not determine such questions or issues,²⁵ and will not support a general verdict or a judgment,²⁶ and it is improper for the jury to return a clearly evasive answer.²⁷ However, the inaptitude of an answer to a question is not necessarily a conflict with the general verdict,²⁸ and an unresponsive answer, not inconsistent with other special findings and not in conflict with the general verdict, is not a good ground for setting the general verdict aside.²⁹ An answer will not fail for lack of responsiveness to the question due to its uncertainty if it is rendered certain by the jury's answers to other questions.³⁰ Where answers are responsive to the interrogatories submitted they will not be disregarded because not such as anticipated owing to the defective form of the interrogatories.³¹ Where the jury were instructed to find the value of timber at the time it was cut and their answer finding the value is in the present rather than the past tense it is not erroneous and misleading as finding the present value of the timber.³²

Action not warranted by statute

While under statute court upon proper motion and notice may render judgment in disregard of an issue "that has no support in the evidence" such action is not warranted by statute solely upon ground of lack of pleadings to tender the issue.—Wright v. McCoy, Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 223.

Question presentable on motion for new trial

The question whether answers to interrogatories are in irreconcilable conflict with, and not supported by, complaint cannot be presented by motion for judgment on answers to interrogatories, but such question is properly presentable under motion for new trial.—Indianapolis Rys. v. (2) Where the matter in issue is the value of professional services, the fact that all the expert testimony offered in the case places a higher value on the services than that found by the jury does not render the jury's finding without support in the evidence, since it is peculiarly within the province of the jury to weigh opinion evidence and the judgment of experts, even when not contradicted, is not conclusive.—Guinn v. Coates, Tex.Civ.App., 67 S.W.2d 621.

Notwithstanding plaintiff's testimony was only evidence as to value of mule killed by defendant, jury's finding that value of mule was substantially less than that testified to by plaintiff was not so unsupported by evidence as to permit court to disregard it, since jury could have been influenced by plaintiff's interest in suit and their own knowledge of subject.—Simmonds v. Statute permitting court to disregard

(1) Statute permitting court to disregard any special-issue jury finding that has no support in the evidence was intended to simplify procedure by permitting trial court to disregard jury's finding on an issue which should not have been submitted at all because of want of evidence sufficient to raise issue or warrant its submission, and was not intended to authorize trial court to assume truthfulness of unsupported testimony of party to suit, or to give conclusive effect to opinion evidence instead of leaving such matter for jury.—Simmonds v. St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co., 91 S.W.2d 332, 127 Tex. 23.

(2) A finding may be disregarded only when there is no evidence to support finding, or finding is so contrary to overwhelming preponderance of evidence as to be clearly wrong.—Volkmer v. Curlee, Tex.Civ.App., 261 S.W.2d 870, error refused no reversible error.

(3) Where the question presented by the established facts is one of law and the special issues relating thereto should never have been submitted to the jury a motion to disregard the findings of the jury on such issues may and should be granted.—American General Ins. Co. v. Williams, Civ. App., 222 S.W.2d 907, reversed on other grounds 227 S.W.2d 788, 149 Tex. 1.

(4) A motion to disregard made under such statute must be directed to the objectionable special issues and point out the reasons why they should be disregarded.—Jinks v. Whitaker, Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 814, error refused no reversible error, 198 S.W.2d 85, 145 Tex. 318.

by the evidence.⁴⁴ It has been held that the alleged absence of evidence to support answers adverse to a party's contention on special issues as to which he has the burden of proof does not constitute error, since the answers merely indicate that party did not discharge his burden.⁴⁵

§ 562. Inconsistent Findings in General

Special answers or findings must be consistent with each other and if they are irreconcilably inconsistent, as a general rule, they destroy each other to the extent of the conflict, but it is the duty of the court to attempt to reconcile them if it can reasonably be done.

Answers to special interrogatories or findings in a special verdict must be consistent with each other.⁴⁶ Where findings or answers to special interrogatories on material issues are utterly and irreconcilably inconsistent with, or repugnant to, each other, they neutralize, nullify, or destroy each other;⁴⁷ they may and must be disregarded,⁴⁸ and

Conflict tantamount to mistrial

Where there is an irreconcilable conflict in findings, and verdict is conflicting on material issues, it is tantamount to a "mistrial."—King v. Hill, Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 628, affirmed 172 S.W.2d 238, 141 Tex. 294—Edson v. Perry-Poley Funeral Home, Tex.Civ.App., 132 S.W.2d 282. Error dismissed, judgment correct.

Findings held not so inconsistent as to require a mistrial or make the action of court in not declaring a mistrial erroneous.—Redmon v. Caple, Tex.Civ.App., 159 S.W.2d 210, error refused—American General Ins. Co. v. Bell, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 877.

After new trial

Where jury's verdict is in irreconcilable conflict on ultimate fact issues controlling disposition, no judgment can be entered thereon, but court must set aside verdict and grant new trial, on which, if such conflict again results, it is duty of court to call jury's attention thereto and send them back for further deliberation.—Kennedy v. Texas Employers Ins. Ass'n, Tex.Civ.App., 169 S.W.2d 784, error refused.

Rules of procedure; writing and other requirements

(1) Action of trial court in orally calling to jury's attention the conflict in their answers to special issues rendering the entry of any judgment thereon impossible, and retiring jury for further deliberation, did not constitute "instructions" required to be in writing.—Pantazis v. Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co., Tex.Civ.App., 162 S.W.2d 1018, error dismissed.

(2) However, under a rule of procedure having the force and effect of a statute and providing that if a verdict contains conflicting findings, the court shall call the jury's attention thereto in writing, an oral charge calling the jury's attention to a conflict and urging further consideration with a view to reconciliation is error.—Standard Acc. Ins. Co. v. Denbow, Tex.Civ.App., 183 S.W.2d 680, affirmed 186 S.W.2d 236, 143 Tex. 465—Consolidated Underwriters v. Ruff, Tex.Civ.App., 164 S.W.2d 550, error refused.

(3) Such rule is no more than a crystallizing into a rule form of what the courts have established as permissible in such contingency.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Carlisle, 161 S.W.2d 484, 138 Tex. 523, answer to certified question conformed to, Civ.App., Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Carlisle, 162 S.W.2d 751.
